TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Dyspepsia.

GENTS:—I feel it my duty to say respecting Burdock Blood Bitters, that it is the best medicine I ever took. I suffered two or three years from stomach troubles and dyspepsia, as well as from liver and kidney complaint. I was not able to attend to my business. My wife was afflicted in much the same way. We read of your Bitters in the papers and made up our minds that we would try them. The result is, my wife and I began to improve at once, and I am now able to do more hard work than before in ten years. It relieved my kidney troubles as well. We both wish you, the makers of it, Godspeed.

USE

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

It is a medicinal preparation, and, at the same time, an elegant and cleanly toilet article. Its action upon the scalp is healthful. It nourishes the glands which support the hair, and causes thin, dry hair to become thick, soft, and vigorous. It restores the color of youth to locks which have become faded with age or disease; and relieves and cures itching, caused by humors of the scalp. Dr. George Gray, Nashua, N. H., writes: "It gives me pleasure to testify to the wonderful effects produced by Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, as observed by me in very many cases. IT WILL CERTAINLY RESTORE THE HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR. It cleanses the head of dandruff, and leaves the hair soft, glossy, and beautiful." F. T. Sandhein, 1010 Spruce st., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "After unavailingly trying a number of preparations to prevent my hair from falling out, and, realizing that I was fast becoming bald, I tried, as a last resort, Hall's Hair Renewer. I have used only four bottles of the Renewer, and am perfectly satisfied that it is the best preparation in the market for checking the falling out of hair, invigorating the hair roots, and promoting a new growth."

Buckingham's Dye

FOR THE

Book Notices.

The Wide Awake for June has been received and is for sale at Mrs. Gilson's store. The parent who has never examined this magazine should purchase this copy. The pleasure which children, and grown persons also, derive from its perusal is such that those who once subscribe for it continue to take it year after year. $3.00 a year; 25 cents for single copies. D. Winthrop & Co., Boston.

The May number of the New England Magazine is a very handsome one. It opens with a fine article on Trinity College, by Prof. Samuel Hart, and with many good pictures of buildings, portraits of Presidents, etc. But the most profusely illustrated article is Herbert L. Aldrich's New Bedford. This Old City is the subject of a fascinating article; for the writer's account of the wonderful whaling industry of which, thirty years ago, New Bedford was the centre of the world, reads almost like a romance. Twenty six illustrations add to the interest of the article and make it one of the most sumptious ever given in this magazine. There are numerous other important contributions. In verse, we have The Picture, by Mary D. Brine, and some lines to Oliver Wendell Holmes on his Departure for England, by Edward P. Guild. The departments are all ably edited, as usual. Published at 43 Milk Street, Boston. Price, 35 cents; $3.00 a year.

The June Magazine of American History is a strong and intensely interesting number. Six articles of antiquarian and historic prominence precede three of current War literature—nine in all, and each a treasure in itself. The Sketch of San Antonio, with which the number opens, touches upon some of the most exciting events in the history of Texas, and is as readable as a romance. Then comes Mr. Bancroft's forcible essay on Self-Government, which no intelligent American can afford to miss—every school boy should study it as part of his education. Dr. Ellis, president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, follows with a chapter on the Reconstruction of History, expressed in clear, terse language, replete with suggestions. The three Civil War Studies are of the first consequence. General Lee elucidates Stonewall Jackson's generalship and Fremont's defeat at the battles or Port Republic and Lewiston. One of the retreating party describes the Retreat of Davis and the Confederate Government from Richmond, accompanied by a superb portrait in steel of the fallen President; and Mr. Waller gives a vivid account of the capture of Mosby, The Last of the Confederates. This magazine is a veritable necessity in every good Library collection. Typographically it is not excelled by any periodical extant. Publication office, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

THE DRAMA

This week is the inauguration of the summer season at the Boston Museum at popular prices. McCaull's Opera Co. in the Black Huzzar is no stranger to Boston and it will be stranger if there are not large audiences at this well known house of amusement.

Vim is proving one of the greatest successes of the year, and its popularity has not yet begun to wane. This is not surprising, for it furnishes an evening of unalloyed pleasure. The piece is full of genuine fun and humor. Mr. Burgess is at his very best as the good old New England farmer's wife, and the support is excellent throughout. The Bijou is lighted by the Edison incandescent system so there is no gas heat, and the ventilation is perfect.

This week there is a Big Specialty Company at the Boston Theatre, at summer prices, and high carnival will rule. The best seats will be placed at One Dollar, and the admission twenty-five cts.

Miss Kate Forsyth has tried Marcelle on Chicago last week with great success. The play, which will be produced at the Park Theatre this week, is a melo-drama, in which the situations are strong and effective. Miss Forsyth will have a strong supporting company.

Among the many attractions booked at the Park Theatre next season are Fanny Davenport, Maggie Mitchell, Helene Dauvray, Rag Baby, Parlor Match, Hoodman Blind and John T. Raymond.

That taint of scrofula in your blood can be wholly eradicated by Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Straw hats have again come to the front.

Pain from indigestion, dyspepsia, and too hearty eating is relieved at once by taking one of Carter's Little Liver Pills immediately after dinner. Don't forget this.

Squash bugs and June bugs are happy.

I was troubled with chronic catarrh and gathering in head; was deaf at times; had discharges from ears, unable to breathe through nose. Before the second bottle of Ely's Cream Balm was exhausted I was cured.—C. J. Corbin, 23 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm cured the wife of a well known U. S. A. General and also two army officers in Arizona of catarrh. Price 50 cents. Pleasant to use.

THE LADIES'

DONGOLA!

OFFICE OF ORDWAY & CLARK,

MANUFACTURERS OF

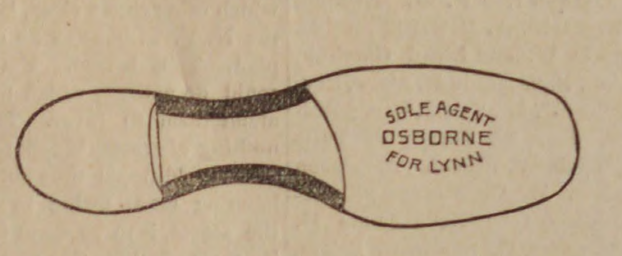
LADIES' FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.

HAVERHILL, MASS., February 25, 1886.

MR. WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

DEAR SIR: We have this day sent you a large invoice of our justly celebrated DONGOLA BOOTS. You will find they are all that has been claimed for them, and far ahead and entirely different from Kangaroo, Glove or Mat Kid. There is no other boot made for Ladies' wear which, for softness of finish, elegance of fit combined with such lasting durability, will give the entire satisfaction of this boot. They are something that has long been needed, as they wear better than French or American Kid, and will not stretch, turn purple, or look rusty. So popular and unprecedented has become the demand for these goods throughout the country, as the merits of the leather have become known, and so limited the importation of skins out of which the goods are manufactured, and so many imitations under similar names have been placed upon the market, that it has been found necessary to copyright the name.

NONE ARE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED WITH OUR AGENTS NAME UPON THE SOLE, THUS:



Also the word "DONGOLA" upon the inside lining.

We shall give you the EXCLUSIVE SALE OF THESE BOOTS IN YOUR CITY, feeling confident with your large trade that they will find a ready market, judging from the large sales they have met with in other cities. Respectfully yours,

ORDWAY & CLARK.

SALEM.

If one wishes to develop his patience way up to the top limit, he should go fishing from Floating Bridge. There is a tradition current in some of the oldest Lynn families, that at one time way back in the old primeval forests fish were actually caught from this pond. But the story to-day sounds wild and legendary, and the best archæologists doubt its authenticity. But there are many people who pin their faith on these fabulous stories, and fishermen to-day sit like sedentary frogs and fish from the rail of Floating Bridge. Their child like simplicity of faith is beautiful. The mythical fish that exists only in their imagination never bites; they bob their wiggling bait the livelong day but the visionary shiner never accepts their tempting invitation; the legendary sucker does not put in an appearance, and the prosaic frog from the neighboring reeds croaks his ironical taunts. Men frequently fish from Floating Bridge until they become petrified and fall over, a senseless mass with a fishing tackle in their hands. Others stop before it is too late, go to some retail dealer and buy a large string of fish, and go home and lie to their wives and innocent children. The writer of this article is the first man who ever fished from Floating Bridge and then went home and told the truth. He wishes to announce loudly, and for all time, that no fish are caught from Floating Bridge, no fish ever were caught, and through the long ages of time to come no fish ever will be caught there.—Lynn Union.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—People living in the vicinity of Elm street have become greatly annoyed of late by the constant discharge of fire arms and at the same time a non appearance of their pet cats. Upon investigation we have learned that three different individuals are concerned in this nefarious business. It is high time now that the public are informed of what is going on in their midst, and those particularly who have lost cats and are unable to account for their absence. One of these miscreants, who seems to me more unmerciful than the other two, has kept a large iron trap, baited and strewn with catnip, to lure the poor victim, and when caught sets his dog on her and she is torn limb from limb. How long this mode of business has been going on we are unable to say, but we think we are safe to state that these cat killers now will be brought to justice. This fiend in human shape, who advertises himself as "dog fancier," is raising up a colony of chickens to scratch up the neighbors' gardens, and so our pet cats must be exterminated that these nuisances may run at large. The humane society intend to make it very warm for this fun loving individual, and he will find out to his sorrow that it will be cheaper to buy his poultry as he wants it than to pay the price of killing of these useful, domestic animals in so shocking and barbarous a manner.

Neuralgia and kindred diseases promptly yield to the immediate action of St. Jacobs Oil, the pain conqueror.

"Gim'me one of them sirloin collars," said a man Saturday night as he entered one of our furnishing goods stores. It took the clerk some time to discover that it was celluloid neck linen that was wanted.

Children with weak eyes' sore ears, or any from of scrofula, should be treated with Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"What is the first thing you would do, Jones, if you were stung by a wasp?" asked Smith, who had been reading an article on the treatment of stings. "Howl" replied Jones, solemnly. And the conversation abruptly ended.

PEABODY.

Dr. J. E. Collins, manager, and his tribe of Kickapoo Indians left town Tuesday morning for Wakefield where they will remain for a week or so. The entertainments given by the company in the Rink during their stay have been very satisfactory and have in the main drawn large audiences. The proprietors of the Indian remedies, for sale by the band, take this novel method of advertising their goods. The entertainments are free, and draw the people, and the advantages of the remedies are then set forth. When a price of admission has been charged it has been refunded to those who bought medicines, making the entertainment practically free. Good order has been preserved by the management at the rink, and abundant opportunity to test the value of the medicines, as Dr. Collins guaranteed to refund the money in every case where the remedies failed to accomplish what was claimed for them. We understand that in no instance has such a claim been made upon him, which speaks volumes for their efficiency. The medicine is on sale at all the druggists. Dr. Collins leaves town with the best wishes of all our citizens, and he has made many friends during his stay here by his courtesy and genial manners.

The Peabody Woman Suffrage League will hold a meeting at the Congregational Church, Thursday, June 3, 1886, at 2.30 and 7.30 P. M. Evening session Rev. Geo. A. Hall will preside. There is to be no Sunday shaving in Boston after June 6. If Boston would pattern after Woburn in other things it would be a good deal better for her morals and reputation.—Woburn Journal.

True enough. There are a great deal worse things done in Boston on Sundays, contrary to law, than Sunday shaving. The police commissioners would do better to devote their attention to the closing of liquor saloons and gambling dens—many of which have not yet been closed, and allow the shaving to go on. Else, as we have said before, enforce the Sunday law in its entirety,—close the barber shops and prohibit all kind of sales on the Lord's day. If the barbers of their own accord, as in this town, combine and agree to close, it is well. But when they are compelled to close, and other illegal things are allowed, which are a great deal worse for the community, it looks like persecution. In a large city like Boston, a great deal of inconvenience must result from the closing of the shops. Many travellers arrive at the city late at night Saturday. Many arrive even as late as Sunday morning to spend the day there. The opening of the barber shops for a few hours Sunday, is as much of a convenience as the Sunday paper, or the Sunday train, or the hoase cars on that day.

THE SUGGESTION of the Knights of Labor to use their efforts to close liquor saloons on the evenings in which other stores close, is regarded by the N. Y. Tribune as an extraordinary plan. That is true. Yet the Knights could do nothing which would so commend them to favor. They could do nothing of greater benefit to themselves. If the additional time obtained by the laboring man, owing to the closing of the stores, is to be spent in the saloon, it were better the stores were not closed. It is however, a well known fact that the suspension of business, either on a holiday or for a short time, means an increased trade at the saloons. If, then, the saloons can be closed at such times, not only will the liquor traffic be demoralized, but the laboring man will have more money to spend in articles of necessity and comfort. The Knights of Labor have here a great power which they can use for the amelioration of much suffering. When they realize that the saloon is their greatest foe, the temperance people will have a strong ally—one that they will gladly welcome.

In the midst of May, with all the orchards so far in advance that their bloom, which commonly lingers to the edge of June, already bestrews the ground; with the oaks in tender leafage, the buttercups in bloom, the fruit setting on the mountain blueberries, the early grapes so near blooming, that their aromatic breath steals out as one brushes past; with the blue violets in haste, too, and the yellow lady's slippers in a hurry; cinnamon roses—the true June roses—budding, and the new growth of the pines brightening the edges and tops of the wood so that their light flashes on the somber density of shade in the gay sunlight; with the bird chorus rich and sweet in the morning hours through the woodlands where the purple clematis swings from the bushes and the downy stemmed yellow violet smiles; in the midst of this lovely and vigorous May, remember that Hallowell & Smiley are offering meat and provisions at the lowest living prices.

The new method of stringing pianos invented by the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company is attracting considerable attention abroad. The Zeitschrift fur Instrumentenbau of Feb. 1, 1886 issued at Leipsic, Germany, contains a long article, declaring their method to be the most perfect yet invented, and predicts that other manufacturers will be obliged to acknowledge this and adopt the system.

An excellent wash for rose bushes and other shrubs is the following formula, used quite extensively by City Forester Doogue of Boston: Carbolic acid, one part; ammonia, one part; soft water, eight parts. Skake well, and apply when the sun is not strongly on the leaves.

Cut worms are creating sad havoc with cabbage and tomato plants, there seeming to be more of the worms this season than heretofore. A remedy, the only effective one found, is to wrap a thin piece of manilla paper around the stem of the plant just above the root. This will prevent the attack of the worms as the paper is too strong for them to cut.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Sleep, comrades, sleep and rest
  On this field of the Grounded Arms,
Where foes no more molest,
  Nor sentry's shot alarms!

Your silent tents of green
  We deck with fragrant flowers,
Yours has the suffering been,
  The memory shall be ours.

—Longfellow

It was one of the brightest days for Memorial Day that we have been favored with for many years. The shower of the previous evening had put the streets in good condition for marching and the Post turned out about seventy-five men, and made a good appearance. They were headed by the Salem Brass Band, in full uniform, and proceeded first to the Soldier's Monument on the Square, where it was appropriately decorated, the band playing a dirge. The old Monument was then decorated, when cars were taken for Cedar Grove Cemetery, where the following graves were decorated.

The Post on their return was dismissed and assembled again in the afternoon for services at the Town Hall. Here the exercises opened with singing by a quartette consisting of Miss Clemons, Mrs. Bartlett, Messrs. Foote and Littlefield, with Mrs. Jacobs as accompanist, who rendered "Still Remembered." Rev. Mr. Sprague read selections from the Scriptures, after which the Salem Brass Band gave a selection, "Zampa." Rev. Mr. Shipman invoked the divine blessing, and the quartette rendered another selection, "Heroes Beloved." An address by Rev. Henry E. Mott, pastor of the Whitefield church of Newburyport, followed, and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. W. Colwell. At the close of the exercises in the hall, the Post was re-formed and proceeded to Monumental Cemetery where the following graves were decorated:

THE

GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE

For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of

B. LAURANCE'S

Axis Cut Pebbles.

The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name, it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in freestone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. A. C. P. and can only be purchased from

A GIGANTIC STRIKE

— BY THE —

NAUMKEAG

Orders have been sent from our headquarters, Boston, to our Branch Stores all along the line from Connecticut to Maine to make room for several thousand Men's, Youth's, Boys' and Children's Suits, as the balance of our wholesale Spring and Summer stock amounting to over two hundred and fifty thousand ($250,000) dollars, is to be distributed among our retail stores with orders to mark them at about the cost of the material. It has been our custom the last few years after our wholesale trade has been supplied to give our patrons a benefit by offering the balance of our wholesale stock to the retail trade at less than actual cost.

On account of the great labor trouble in the West our trade from that locality has not been as large as in former years, consequently we have a much larger stock to dispose of than any previous year, and as the NAUMKEAG is one of the largest, our share of the stock is enormous. Remember these are not old goods carried over from last season, but all new, clean, handsome, stylish goods which we manufactured for this season's trade.

Read the Prices of a few Lots:

Lot No 1. 350 Men's nobby all wool Cassimere and Scotch Mixed Suits, comprising ten different patterns of checks, plaids and fancy mixtures, goods manufactured by the Amesbury, Georges River and Hamilton Mills, all sizes from 34 to 44. These are regular $10 and $12 suits, which we propose to close out at retail for only

$6 per suit.

Lot No. 2. 375 Men's and Young Men's Fine All-Wool Suits made from some of the most stylish patterns manufactured by the celebrated Chester Moses, Franklin and Carcline Mills. The lot comprises over 15 different styles to select from; all sizes from 33 to 44. There is not a suit in the lot but would be considered cheap at $12, we shall close the entire lot at retail for

$8 per suit.

Lot No 3. 420 Men's and Young Men's Suits manufactured from the famous Cowan, Central Falls, Brighton, Putnam and Sawyer Mills Finest all-Wool Cassimere and Cheviots. No better goods made for style or wear in this country. The lot comprises about 20 different patterns, both sack and frock coats—the latest novelties of the season—thoroughly and handsomely made and trimmed—regular $15 and $16 suits which we shall close out at retail for only

$10 per suit.

100 Men's All-Wool, Indigo Blue, Middlesex Flannel Suits, warranted fast colors—regular $12 suits for only

$8 per suit.

200 Boys' all-wool Short Pant Suits, good manufactuted by the Victory and Hamilton Mills; will fit boys from 4 to 13 years, of age; all neat, handsome mixtures, perfect in fit, at $2.50 each, about half price, remember the price

$2.50 per suit.

175 Boys' all-wool Suits, ages 4 to 13 years, comprising light and dark colors made in either style, Plaited or Norfolk, goods manufactured by the Mechanicsville and Amesbury Mills; regular $4 suits for only

$3 each.

220 Boys' strictly all-wool Norfolk Suits in plaids and fancy mixtures—goods made by such well known mills as the Carlyle, Chester Moses, etc., all new, handsome and desirable patterns, will fit boys from 4 to 14 years of age, which we shall close out at

$4 per suit.

150 Boys' Fine all-wool Suits, will fit boys from 11 to 17 years of age; goods made from such well known mills as the Mechanicsville, Brighton, Georges River and others—all new and desirable patterns—regular $8 and 9 suits which we shall close out for

$5 per suit.

125 Boys' strictly all-wool Suits in light and dark colors, ages 11 to 17 years, goods made by the Franklin, Bedford and Carolina Mills—all handsome, stylish goods that will give satisfaction, for

$6 per suit.

175 Boys' Fine Dress Suits, ages 11 to 17, comprising several different patterns manufactured by the Cowan, Broadbrook and Calumet Mills—all handsome nobby patterns—regular $12 and 13 suits, we shall close them out for

$8 per suit.

In connection with this sale we shall offer some great bargains in Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, Caps and Furnishing Goods.

Boys Remember we will give to every boy purchasing goods in the Boys' Department to the amount of 25c and upwards a handsome Story Book and to the amount of $4 and upwards a nice bat and ball.

Spring Opening.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT.

SECOND FLOOR

We cordially invite the Ladies of Salem and vicinity to our Opening of the largest and most carefully selected stock of Millinery Goods ever shown in this city, including Trimmed Bonnets and Round Hats, both imported and of our own design and execution. In Fancy Laces and Silk Lisses, we have many elegant patterns, and in some of the most delicate tints, fairly rivalling the shadings of nature. In Flowers, which are to be so largely used the coming season, we have a most attractive display, as fresh as from the garden, only lacking fragrance. We have also in Untrimmed Hats and Bonnets, a very large assortment from the strongest School Hat to the finest foreign make. In fact everything which goes to make up a complete stock. Mrs. A. C. Washburn, our manager, was in New York at the Importers' Opening in Feb. securing many choice things at that time, and has kept close watch of the market up to the present time. Having through years of experience formed a large acquaintance with Importing as well as Jobbing Houses, which gives her great advantage in selecting Desirable Styles and making Lowest Prices. Miss Sadie Bushby will remain with us, as will also Miss Etta Brown and Miss Hattie Gliddin. We have also secured the services of Miss Carrie Palmer, who will join our corps of popular sales ladies. And now we feel sure almost every lady calling on us next week, or after, will meet an old acquaintance who will gladly show them every attention, and will take a personal interest in pleasing.

SPRING, 1886.

We take pleasure in announcing to the Ladies of Salem and Essex County, that we have now open and ready for inspection our full line of Ladies, Misses and Children's Outside Garments, Wraps, Shawls, etc., for Spring and Summer wear. We may venture to say without any egotism, that our selections in this department far surpass anything we have previously offered. The increasing demand for superior Ready Made Garments and Suits has led us to exercise unusual care in selecting none but the best, both in material and workmanship, and we guarantee all to be just as represented. We have every style and quality a lady can wish for. Long Garments for driving and travelling, Short Wraps and Jackets for street wear in every available shade and colors, both Foreign and American make. Suits, stylish and of superior quality. Shawls, India Chuddas, Boucle, Cashmere, and Fancy Embroidered Scarfs in all grades and shades. Children's Garments, simply beautiful in Boucle, English, German and American Goods. Our Infants' Department requires especial mention for its variety of Long and Short Robes, Cloaks, Slips and Blankets.

Jersey Waists, fancy colors beaded. Mikado fronts, Vest fronts, Plain fronts and braided, in every variety; and a great many more equally good things that we have not space to mention.

We cordially invite you to come and see for yourselves, assuring all courteous attention, and any information we can bestow.

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER;

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made. We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bousley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated with courtesy whether anything is esired or not.

the necessity of one undivided nationality from the Pine-Tree state to the Gulf. Imagine a half dozen independent and jealous nationalities within these limits; consider how easily jealousy becomes hostility; think of the cost of standing armies, and the waste of actual or threatened wars; calculate, if you can, the loss of moral force in the wrangling of nations,—and then wonder whether or not our exemption from all this means anything less than moral purpose. If I mistake not, the requirements of "manifest destiny" are too plain to be overlooked and too imperative to be neglected. I do not speak from the bias of a section when I say that "manifest destiny," which is another name for divine providence, points to the inevitable demand for a government one and undivided over this vast expanse of territory. The rebellion was against the nature of things. Only by the integrity of the Union can the purposes of history be fulfilled. Upon America rests the seal of an impending mission. Shall we become something more than silent partners in the history of the coming years?

In seems fitting, in addressing you who have been makers of history, and upon this day sacred to a historic crisis, that I deal with our relation to that cause of events known as history. And it is natural, surely, for one whose years are yet in their ascendant, that I ask you to view history as a means to prophecy. But can history be construed into prophecy? Is there such an unmistakable development of events as that from the past one can infer the future? Or do events possess a mere semblance of unity, to be resolved into chance upon examination? I believe history to be a trustworthy oracle. I know that experience has been likened to the stern-light of a ship, "driven by chance winds over a shoreless sea." Yet he who thus reads history and reviews biography does but reveal a folly all the more startling, that the consequences are so terrible and all the more surprising that others have read the past to better advantage. You have borne conspicuous parts in a most stupendous and fruitful conflict. Yet after all, as a wave of the Atlantic views its force, because to it belongs the momentum of the ocean, your mightiest deeds are of value only as they connect themselves with the whole course of human nature. A friend bade Rufus Choate good bye as he was about to go on an ocean voyage, and said to him, "Mr. Choate, you will be here a year hence." "Sir," replied the great lawyer, "I shall be here a hundred years hence and a thousand years hence." If you, my brother men, and the comrades who are gone, have associated your deeds with universal human interests, with equal pride, may each exclaim: "I shall be here a hundred years hence, and a thousand years hence." The race does not go back and begin over; henceforth, and until another great question is answered, its starting point is your achievement. To-day, after the conflict, more even than when written, in words which repetition cannot dull, because through them throbs a master purpose.

"Thou, too, sail on, O ship of state!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!"

In considering America as the land of "manifest destiny," I shall submit to you three propositions.

1. Every historic people has been the guardian of some moral purpose. The people themselves may not have recognized this. The age may have known nothing of its mission. But in the retrospect, the only explanation of the past is that through apparently most isolated events runs the unity of a moral purpose. History goes farther and adds that every historic people has been immortal—its spirit has been unconquerable—until its work was done. Once more, and a final affirmation: History asserts that every historic nation has fallen when, and only when, the heart of the common people had lost the enthusiasm of its mission. When we would study history, it is to the people we must turn. The few leaders do not dominate this world. This disorganized and abnormal minority, harnessed by necessity and driven by passion, do not govern it. The common people rule the world, for good or for evil. Now the great facts of the race are the plainest of facts. We may not know the individual very well, but we know the community. A dead beat may now and then worm a dollar out of your pocket, because you believe him an honest man in trouble, but put a dozen of them together, and you have their photograph. We may fail to detect a single wolf in sheep's clothing, but think of mistaking a flock of wolves for a flock of sheep. The origin of an event, the value of a dynasty, the character of an individual we may dispute about, and come to no common opinion. But the grand lineaments of a race or an age, and especially the moral characteristics of an epoch and a people, are something too plain to be mistaken.

I trust it may not be uninteresting, as the foundation for a future demand, to glance at two or three historic illustrations of the fact that the life of a nation depends upon its adoption of a moral purpose, and that not until the heart of the people proves false to this trust, does the nation perish. The case of the Hebrew commonwealth is only one selected from the illustrations of history. Beginning as a rude mass of uncultivated bondsmen, never a fighting people and grown cowardly as a race will by long slavery, yet they conquered for themselves a place in history among nations more and mightier then they. The moral purpose which this people served is too familiar to need repetition, and the burden of their prophets reveals at once the source of their danger and the ground of their hope. Always with these prophets it is a question of moral purpose among the people. No matter who were their leaders, either priest or king, it was when the multitude did evil, forgetting their national purpose in their apostacy, that judgment fell upon them. The very semblance of national independence was finally taken from them; but it was not until, as though to justify the verdict of history, the people had first rejected their national purpose at the climax of their national life; "His blood be on us, and on our children."

Turn from the Hebrew people to the brilliant flowering, the sudden and complete fading, of Greek national life. The spirit of a mighty people triumphed at Marathon. Their mission is not obscure. Art, language, letters—these form not less a moral purpose in the divine place then religion. They have crowned that land an immortal diadem. Yet how soon did the freshness of its glory fade! It was not by chance that underneath the chief court of Athens was placed the fabled cave of the Fairies. National punishment waits on national apostacy. Athens forgot its mission. Art stooped from being the hand-maid of heathen religion to become the servant of heathen passion. Aspasia, "a woman who was a sinner," ruled the court of Pericles. The moral purpose for which that nation existed—art, languge, a letters—this people could carry no further.

It was even worse with Rome, by as much as her inheritance of morals was purer and her power greater. Rome began her career of conquest with the most valuable possession given to any nation—a sound morality. Her domestic life was right at the core. Her mission was clearly to declare the authority and beneficence of civil law; and she started with the capital of a pure family life. Five centuries passed away, and the first divorce had yet to be granted at Rome. But the time came when victories brought vices. This people learned—what God grant we need not learn by experience—how that a nation is in never so great danger as in the hour of its greatest success. The sentiment which had dominated their earlier days, that a citizen of Rome was the peer of any man, whatever his station, became scarcely more then a memory. Never has the truth been more forcibly illustrated that a free people must no their own work. The landed peasantry—small landed proprietors—the strength of any government that ever existed, were wiped out, and large estates took the place of small freeholds. It is a black day in a nation's calendar when the number of estates grows less instead of more. A mercenary foreign soldiery was hired to do Rome's fighting. Then it was that

"Rome, whom mightiest kingdoms courtsied to,
Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,
Did shameful execution on herself."

Because the heart of the people had grown hopelessly corrupt, therefore Rome fell. Why did Rome fall? "Because, and only because, God is king;" and it is written on every page of history that to each nation is committed a moral purpose, and that to prove traitor to it means death. A moral purpose dominates history as certainly as gravity sways the stars. And when a nation ceases to have a mission—some moral question to solve—it has no reason for being. It is forever true, as Lowell tells us, that

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

2. The portentous problem to-day is a moral one. It might seem that the absorbing question of the hour was the industrial. But whenever we reach down to the principles which underlie the visible agitation, we shall find them resting on a moral need. It is my design to show how that the labor question, so called, is only the expression of a larger problem of which it forms a part, that it reduces itself upon examination to a moral issue, and will admit only a moral solution. It will stand us in stead not to narrow our conception of the conditions involved in the present agitation, lest we provide too scant a supply, and find ourselves at last in the awkward predicament of a tailor who contracts to cut a suit for a large man out of a small pattern. He has either to stretch out the cloth or abbreviate the man. In one case the garments won't wear; to the other operation the man won't submit. No meagre solution of this great problem will be accepted. It must be ample and complete. At the same time the question grows in size continually. We need a comprehensive conception of the problem.

We turn to our great industrial fabric. We see the agitation here deepening and broadening into social matters, and then think, not altogether without alarm, that we not only have not solved the problem of the relations of man to man in our industrial age, but do not seem to know the elements of that solution. We find indeed, without much trouble, that on this subject there exists a lamentable confusion of ideas. We have well nigh hopelessly jumbled together things which differ, and have called them by the same name. We demand that that be submitted to legislation which can have by any possibility only a moral solution. Then, worst, we have dropped out the moral idea altogether. The root of the difficulty lies in confounding inequality with oppression. Inequality is natural, universal, inevitable. Oppression is natural and general, though not universal and not inevitable. Oppression can be, and under favorable conditions will be, regulated by legislation; but legislation can never touch inequality. Oppression is inequality forced to an unfair and unnatural extreme. However old we may grow, inequality belongs to the individual, and the individual is amenable only to moral forces. One individual here and there can be coerced against his will by process of law; but the very law which controls him exists as an enactment only because of the moral sentiment of the majority. We work everywhere toward the conviction that, in taking up the industrial question, we confront a moral problem.

Both sides of this complex agitation make themselves felt. To one disposed to be fair the fact of the interdependence of humanity is pregnant. We are members one of another. My individuality is offset against yours. Because you are you, therefore I am I. In political economy, at least, whether in religion or not, no man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself.

The man of Nazareth spoke true beyond question when he said: "The poor ye have always with you, and whereso-ever ye will ye may do them good." Plenty of room is there for philanthropy, and abounding demand for justice. Capitalists divide the profits on the plan proposed by the white man to the Indian after the hunt: "I'll take the turkey and you take the owl, or you take the owl and I'll take the turkey." Unless there is a combination, the poor man takes the owl every time. The largest portion of the violent demonstration is by professional agitation. The real poor, who eye a loaf of bread as a luxury, shiver and starve in silence, and "'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis, 'tis true," we let them. God, forgive us! We stand with our humanity outside the rush of human events, unless they concern us personally, forgetting that the hard lives of utter poverty take all the lineaments of the godlike out of human faces, and that many an one fashioned for more tender caressing has become bride to the dark river as the last refuge from deeper damnation:

'Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery,
Swift to be hurled—
Any where, any where,
Out of the world!

Perishing gloomily,
Spurred by contumely,
Cold inhumanity,
Burning insanity,
Into her rest."

Yet let us not neglect the other side, for there is another side which complicates the matter. I do not forget that business is often loaded beyond what it will bear. Many a striker has killed the goose that laid the golden egg—at least the silver one, which is better than none at all. Many business men assert that their workmen fix it so they can get neither turkey nor owl. We are not far from moral elements whichever way you look at it. Not a tenth part of the agitation arises from oppression—from those who are forced by inequality below living conditions, or even below many comforts. Consider that in time of general scarcity, as during war or famine, we do not hear as much complaint as when there is enough and to spare. The difficulty is more inequality than oppression. In the great majority of cases men are not working for starvation wages. The source of the difficulty is that A eats truffles while B must put up with a five cent loaf. Unpleasant, surely; an inequality which, like all inequalities, is oftentimes galling; but, as an inequality alone, cannot be helped by legislation. Whether or not it shall become oppression, which may be legislated upon, must be determined.

To remove inequalities by force of law, in the proportion that it was successful, would be to kill ambition; to kill ambition would be to quench hope; to quench hope would be to arrest progress, and remand us back to savagery. Yet is there no denying that inequality has been carried to the point of oppression —is carried to that point every day among us—and what shall be done about it? Legislation can never set the world right. Indeed legislation can not be obtained until the majority as organized are beyond working that oppression against which they legislate. The very impossibility of success along lives of legal agitation, forces us to the adoption of a moral purpose. Since inequality is natural and inevitable, and cannot be regulated by law, the question whether it shall be grinding and oppressive is a moral one. It belongs with those who possess the abilities and opportunities for acquisition, to make their advantages the foundation of a larger blessing or the burden of a deeper curse. Having, therefore, traced our most pressing problems to a moral need, I remark, finally:

3. The future of the world lies with America. Our land is in a position to decide moral issues as no nation before us has ever been. We have nothing we did not receive, nor do we glory as though we had received it not. We recognize that it means responsibility. It is simply our "manifest destiny" to have been set in this forefront of time, under the eye of the world, to take the next step in God's drama of human life. I am dealing with no Fourth of July patriotism—or what this has fallen to in these our latter days. It is the sober suggestion which arises as we stand looking to-day upon the flower-strewn grave of a buried past. There is no room for trifling, none for verbal pyrotechnics—none! No fire cracker enthusiasm. Blood is too fresh on our streets. Unholy agitation cloaked under the guise of a holy cause, is too recent. The future of the world is with America, because this nation is fitted to adopt a moral purpose. But "it is a rule that holds in economy as well as in hydraulics, that you must have a source higher than your tap." You have got to know why and how this people holds the solution. It is essential that a spirit be formed which regards duties before rights. Perhaps we have contended for our rights long enough; the hour has struck in this nation to look out for some one's else rights. You heard one of the first strokes of the demand, and obeyed the summons. But the alarm sounds on. The problem now pressing our nation will be solved when, and only when, this spirit of a new social responsibility has been worked into the individual human lives, whose aggregate forms this nation. We shall talk less of "my rights and your duties," more of "your rights and my duties." You say to me: "This is preaching!" I reply, "Give me something better, and call it what you please."

This nation ought to be in a state of mind to take up this question of social responsibility, whether it is or not. Our freedom is based on moral and spiritual elements; it goes back to Augustine and his monks. We speak with pride of the Anglo-Saxon conscience. This conscience is a sturdy truthfulness under christian control. Columbus pointed the prow of his little vessel westward across an unknown, trackless sea, with an avowed moral purpose. Purpose steered the Mayflower, with its pilgrim band, to where

> "The breaking waves dashed high
> On a stern and rock-bound coast;
> And the woods against a stormy sky
> Their giant branches toss'd."

Purpose waited on Lexington and Valley Forge and Yorktown. Then last, and perhaps greatest, in the evidence of a moral mission, is the struggle with which you are identified. As sure as history, the divine promises were to our fathers and to their children. The great Aryan race has gone forth from the rising toward the setting sun, until now, in the person of its youngest and most powerful member, its feet stand on the great western sea. Already the farthest Orient is stretching forth hands of faith and hope; and despite the suffering brought on them and the shame on us by a few of our number from across their eastern ocean, the sun which set in their west, having traversed the globe, shall go forth from this youngest land to light again the celestial empire and the isles of the sea.

Let me record, then, my impression that we must adopt a broader and truer standard of social responsibility. Violence and anarchy must be suppressed; but after that men must learn to read the new rendering of the old command: "Whosoever would be chief among you, let him be your servant." Always one man will and ought to stand higher than another, because always one is superior to another. Only we want a new test of superiority. We would change the magic word from "get" to "give." The difficulty is not between capitol and labor; it is between your need and my supply, or my need and your supply. It has taken the world a long time to learn it, yet learn it the world must, that the only remedy for social ills is a spirit of service. You can't make a man generous by law; it is a moral matter. It is refreshing to note that there is a poetic justice somewhere, and that those employers who have treated their workmen like men have suffered least in this epidemic of violence. What remains for us, then, but to master for ourselves this new ambition. The nation is but the sum of its individuals. A mighty people is not a unit; it is an aggregate, which only move as a unit under the influence of a mighty impulse. To the people must we address ourselves, for they have in the past, they shall in the future, control the destinies of the world. When we view the magnitude of the problem which comfront us, we might fear lest some new or unforeseen trial overwhelm this government. But when we take our stand with the evident purpose of God in history, we realize a nation, like a man, is immortal till its work is done. The past is ours, men and women of America, because of the heroism of the generation whose fallen ones we remember to-day. The future is ours, men and women of America, if we have the courage to take up our "manifest destiny." In full view, at this hour, of what the past has cost us, the prayer is not untimely: God give heart and will to this great people.

(For the Press.)

A person who is in the habit of traveling on the railway, notices many little things of a humorous nature, and we are no exception. Thinking they would be of interest to our readers, we have noted a few which came under our personal observation.

As the car stopped at Chelsea, a finely dressed lady, with a haughty air, left the car, and her dainty feet had hardly struck the concrete paving, before every one was startled by the cries of a dirty-faced, ragged boy, who yelled "Ma! Ma! have you got my cocoanut cakes?" The look of disgust that came over that lady's face as she grabbed her offspring by the hand, and marched up the street, was painful.

It is not uncommon to have ladies enter a car, take a seat in front of you, and begin to comment on a lady friend who is sitting across the aisle, something like this: "Is that a sealskin sack or is it plush? she has got false hair can't you see, it is four shades different from her own. I wonder where she is going. Probably she will spend the whole day shopping, and then only buy a bunch of hairpins, and have them sent home." Just then the object of their remarks turns around, and the two ladies beam on her a pleasant smile, and gushingly remark, "I am delighted to see you, going in to town, etc., etc.,"

Then there is another style of female who will come down to the train accompanied by a friend, fifteen minutes before it starts, and having secured a seat, throws up the window, and commences a conversation with her friend, who remains outside, and just as the bell strikes for the train to start, she thinks of a lot she forgot to say, and as it moves out of the station she is heard bawling after her friend, "Yes I will; Oh yes you tell her—Remember me to—, good by" etc. And by the time the train is half way to the next station, she draws in her head and probably remembers that she left her satchel or something else in the ladies waiting room at the station.

Then there is the school girl, who walks in, winks at the brakeman, turns over three or four seats for about three of her companions to sit in, and each taking one, the talk commences on the looks of this fellow, and what that fellow said, and what he thought, till the passengers in the vicinity, all want to change their seats to another car.

We were waiting in Lynn depot a short time ago, when in walked a large colored woman with a market basket on her arm, and approaching the ticket agent, she held the following conversation, which was carried on, on her part in such a loud voice, as to attract the attention of all present. "Say Mister, what time do the next car go to West Lynn?" "5.45," laconically replied the ticket seller. "5.45 how much is that, how much is that of six?" "Quarter of six" was the reply. "Which track do I go on?" was the next question as she spread her basket to keep half a dozen people from approaching the ticket office. "Take the furthe-track" said the dispenser of pasteboards. She gathered up her basket, and as she was about leaving the room she yelled, "Say boss you don't think they'll car me to Boston, do yah!". The annoyed ticket seller did not deign to reply, and she rushed across the track, and sat down beside her big basket to wait for the train.

The deaf man often affords considerable amusement. A young man was observed one morning to take a seat with this individual, and the conversation turned upon a gentleman a few seats ahead, who had made considerable money at shaving notes. How did he make his money, asked the old gentleman. Oh by shaving paper, remarked the young man. Shaving paper, shrieked the old gent, I don't believe a darn word of it. I've been an apothecary all my life, and I know no such money could be made on shaving paper.

Seating myself in the train one day, I was struck by the pompous airs of an Englishman who occupied the seat in front of me, and was amused at the lordly way in which he bought a copy of an illustrated paper of the train boy. About this time a fond mother at the other end of the train, turned her three year old into the aisle to run. The young one was eating home made molasses candy, and its face and hands were well daubed with it. After running the length of the car a few times, it was suddenly attracted by the highly colored pictures in the Englishman's paper and stepped close to him to look at them. The man moved a little to one side, and held the paper a little higher, pretending to take no notice of the child. But young America wanted to see the pictures and stood on tiptoe in order to do so. The action of the child attracted the attention of the passengers, and the Englishman threw the paper on the seat beside him, and was about to resume his newspaper, when the child put its sticky fingers on the lavender kids of the gent, and said "Can't I see the pictures?". The victim looked at his soiled gloves in disgust, and at this juncture the mother regained her offspring, and took it back to the seat with her.

A richly dreseed lady was riding on the Portland train one day, and had piled up beside her several small packages and a shawl. The car was crowded and there were many standing. Quite a number had asked the lady for the seat, and she had sweetly smiled and said "it is engaged." At Ipswich an old Irish woman with a large basket got in, and stood a short distance from the lady. She looked weary and tired, but no one offered her a seat. A few minutes later a fine looking gentlemen came slowly through the car, and seeing the seat was not occupied, asked the lady if it was engaged. She said "oh no;" and removed her bundles to make room. The gentleman motioned to the Irish woman, and she came and took the seat, while the gentleman continued his way to the smoker, and a smile passed over the faces of those who had witnessed the incident. But the lady (?) looked as if she wanted to cry.

Riding into Boston recently, a well known business man, was much annoyed by a fellow who kept running out and leaving the car door open at every station and then getting on just as the train started, and again leaving it open. Our friend had shut the door after him several times, and as the train was about leaving another station, he thought he heard the fellow coming, and cried out "Shut that door". "I guess I will wait till I get inside" came the reply of a female voice in a high key, as she slammed the and swept past the innocent cause of her wrath, while our friend, looked up in confusion, to see the fellow who had annoyed him, enter the other car.

A Great Victory

A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,

THE MEETING in the South Church last week in the interest of woman suffrage, showed plainly two things, each associated with the other; that the interest in the movement was earnest among the speakers and the directors of the meeting; that such interest appeared to be exclusively confined to them.

The attendance at the meeting was small. Yet the speakers were well known and able. There seems to be as much of an aversion, on the part of some individuals, to a meeting in favor of the suffrage of women, as there was years ago to a meeting held for the purpose of considering the abolition of slavery. This is not confined to the male portion of the community—alone. Many women are even stronger in their denunciation of woman suffrage than the opposite sex.

The meeting last week was held for the purpose of provoking a discussion on the subject, and especially for the creation of an interest in the movement among the female sex. One of the arguments advanced by the opponents of woman suffrage has been the small number of advocates in its favor among the sex to be benefited thereby. It has been said that when the women show that they want suffrage, and that they realize the responsibility which would devolve upon them by its exercise, they will get it.

No such argument however, was advanced when the blacks of the South were granted at once the rights of citizenship by the proclamation of emancipation. No such argument is used against the proposed qualifications for suffrage among our adopted citizens. It is a libel upon the female sex of Massachusetts to say that they are not as well qualified, that they do not understand as well the duties of citizenship, as the average male who casts his vote into the ballot box.

Independent of the right of Massachusetts to confer the privilege of municipal suffrage upon the women of this State, there is not a doubt on which side such privilege or duty would be exercised. There is no cause of temperance, purity of morals, sanctity of the home, and home influences, education of the children, good order and enforcement of law, upon the wrong side of which the women of this State are found. There would be fewer grog shops open, more gambling shops suppressed, if the influence of women were exerted at the polls.

How extensively the right of suffrage would be used by the women is a question. It is claimed by them that the limited suffrage, for School Committee, which they now have, is not a sufficient incentive to call them to the polls. Let there be an issue, as was the case in Woburn two years ago, and it has been shown that they would use their right of suffrage for the good of the community, and on the side of right and justice. Unlimited suffrage in Massachusetts would give them a voice in the entire legislation of this State. There would be no lack of incentive then.

To the hastening of this day, such meetings as were held last week are intended to be an aid. No harm can come from discussion of the merits of the case. We have no sympathy with those, male or female, who will not attend such a discussion, from dread of hearing some new truths. The movement is not likely to be put down thus. The tendency of the age is not in the direction of the restriction of any of the rights or privileges of the female sex. It is in the direction of suffrage for women in Massachusetts, which is destined before many years to become an accomplished fact. Whether in five years or twenty is a matter for honest difference of opinion. But come it surely will.

At the meeting last week of the State Pharmaceutical Association in Boston, a committee was appointed to consider the advisability of asking the legislature to establish a uniform liquor license for Pharmacists throughout the state. The object of this move is to separate Pharmacy from rumselling and to take from the local authorities the right to fix the license fee. There does seem to be a need of just such a law.

A. F. & J. H. Poor, who have purchased the Atlantic Car Works have received the plans for the adaption of the works to their business and work will commence at once. Arrangements have been made for the running of railroad tracks through the premises and a complete plant for every description of leather manufacturing will be put in. They will be unable to remove their business from this town before fall.

It may not be generally known that Merrill & Mackintire 216 and 220 Essex street, Salem, have in the 216 store one of the finest stocks of toys, wagons, velocipedes, doll carriages, croquet and other goods of that nature, in Essex County. Which since they have opened it, they have made a great success of. Many people who formerly purchased in Boston, now buy in Salem. Their prices are low, and our readers will find them good people to trade with.

Memorial Day Address.

The Rip Van Winkle of the Southern Confederacy put in an appearance a few weeks since. A striking anachronism. After a quarter of a century of fitful slumber, Mr. Jefferson Davis stands on the same spot in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1886, which he made historic in 1861 as the capital of disunionists. The incongruous is always striking. Nothing is more startling than the appearance of one who stands out against the inevitable. He would need be a Titan who should refuse to put up with the nature of things. When his controversy is concerning something of deep moment, the elements are both grotesque and pitiable. An unmistakable pathos has been thrown around the "lost cause,"—a pathos inseparable from a grand attempt which has failed. So far as the ex-president of the ex-confederacy is concerned, it may be too soon to do him historic justice. Yet there is a feeling abroad that the man "who ran away from Richmond with his train weighted with foreign gold and his mind exercised in saving his household effects," the man whom a soldier, risking the suspicion of insulting a woman, brought to, and found it required but the stripping off of a water-proof and possibly the now antique crinoline to unsex the creature—I say there is a suspicion abroad that this is not the stuff heroes are made of. Imagine that water-proofed, crinolined man stalking along the pages of distinguished biography! Jefferson Davis, Herr Most! As a historic figure Mr. Davis is not a success. I would not shoot the shafts of ridicule at the vanquished. This great nation is too noble to play the part of Achilles, and drag the dead body of any Hector at its chariot wheels. It has something else to do than to slay the slain. The reproof of the American people is not aimed at Mr. Davis because he failed, but at Mr. Davis for this, that by his own choice he is politically dead, and that being dead he yet speaketh.

Though failure is tragic, it may be sublime. Touissant L'Overture, the black slave, and Jefferson Davis, the white master, both captive, afford a sufficiently instructive contrast in the judgment of history. God has affixed a posthumous reward to virtue as certainly as a penalty to crime, whether national or individual. The climax of martyrdom in an unjust cause is its futility. The responsibility of discerning right from wrong rests upon every human being, but it speaks and thrills in the lives of earth's conspicuous ones. It should not have needed so many years to teach a man that the voice of freedom is the voice of God. It is the fate of strong men who labor in an unrighteous cause to see their energies frittered away to nothing against the ultimate success of inexorable right. However sincere may have been his motives, when Mr. Davis passes away he will leave behind him a record of betrayed trust, some say of personal ends sought at the sacrifice of public good, and surely of powers devoted to a cause which was lost and which deserved to be lost. It is, on the other hand, the compensation of those who give themselves to a cause which is first, that, though they be martyrs, the nature of things espouses their side, takes up the work where they lay it down, and completes it. The words spoken of "the black chieftain of Hayti" may be said of every one who sides with God's eternal truth—said of your comrades who forwarded the victory yet died without the sight, a prophecy fulfilled for them how soon.

> "Thou has left behind
> Powers that will work for thee: air, earth > and skies;
> There's not a breathing of the common wind
> That will forget thee; thou hast great allies.
> Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
> And love, and man's unconquerable mind."

The reception accorded Mr. Davis was the ebullition of the pent-up feeling of a repressed section. The anachronism involved in the ex-chief's appearance and the applause it callled forth is so glaring as to create discussion at the same time it furnishes instruction. The work of twenty-five years ago has been done and will not be undone. God is under no necessity to take up dropped stitches—He drops none. God retraces no steps. God's hour glass is never upturned; the sands of time run forever through a narrow now into a bottomless future. History is only God's forethought making itself felt in time. It is because history is permanent that this demonstration has created barely a ripple. "The confederacy is as dead as the dust of Abel." Were it otherwise, would this demonstration have taken place? If it possessed one element of erasive power should you run the risk of having the names Fort Donelson, Vicksburg, Lookout Mountain, unwritten, or allow Mobile and Gettysburg and the march to the sea to be read from your battle flag?

The honorable general, who represented at this celebration the disbanded armies of the confederacy, may eulogize the spirit of the southern soldiery, as explaining how "Lee and his barefoot and hungry heroes for four bloody years kept vast numbers at bay, and in the space of three years defeated and forced from the supreme command at least five of these renowned federal captains." We have no wish to subtract from the valor of their achievements, which only adds lustre to conqueror and conquered alike. I am reminded of the little American girl who was looking through the British museum and came to a cannon. "Our soldiers took this cannon from yours at Bunker Hill," said the guide. "Well," replied the little maid, "you have the cannon and we have the hill." All honor to the brave men, formerly of the south, now of the Union—our brethren. Let them have the record of their heroic deeds—we have the Union. Here let it rest. There are not embers enough left to make glow again the fires of sectional jealousy and discord. The blessings of peace are too pronounced. The sons have another, something to do than to fight over again the battles of their fathers, nor do they intend to be under that necessity. We may however use memory to stimulate action. Memorial day should exist for two purposes. It should remember the fallen. It should guide the future.

Whatever use we may put the day to, its original intention should never be forgot. In this, suffering and sympathy blend. We are of one blood. It was a fratricidal strife, and the "blue" and the "grey" who joined battle lie side by side in death. Sorrow goes far to obliterate distinctions. However mistaken the cause, martyrdom is forever heroic. Come to this season, then, which is at once glad and sad, and strew the graves of the dead with flowers. To remember thus the departed is an instinctive prompting of the soul. It has arisen spontaneously among the most diverse peoples, a human blossom whose habitat is universal. It becomes even prophetic when we recall how One was placed in a sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid, and that sepulchre was in a garden. In our forward looking, at least, death gives place to resurrection. Were you and I in the sunny south we should then remember the fallen, as would they in our northern clime. We may well be beforehand in reconciliation—the victor can afford to be generous. It is well to set apart a day which so long as this nation lasts shall be sacred to memory. We might grow otherwise forgetful of our obligation, and take our national inheritance as a matter of course.

Reverence and gratitude are not the strong points of this age. We are too hurried to cultivate these graces, and our flaring lights which put out the stars blind us to the gentler truths. We live on the jump, eat our meals and snatch our sleep on a moving train, the whistle of the locomotive breaks in on the silence of our cemeteries, and no funeral procession has time to pause at our city gates, were it even to raise the dead to life. Let us take this moment, at least, to commemorate the past—with tears, if you will—before we turn to anticipate the future. We thank God that, in the leadings of history, we have these memories of our heroic past. Our national epic has been written in the life-blood of men and the heart-tears of women. But written it is; and as for those who wrote it,

> "On Fame's eternal camping ground,
> Their mighty tents are spread;
> And Glory guards with ceaseless round,
> The bivouac of the dead."

But when, having dropped a tear, without shame, for the foemen worthy of your steel as for your companions in arms, we now make this hour the standpoint from which to regard the future; sympathy may indeed temper but must not overbear judgment. Then it is we recognize the eternal destruction between the right and the wrong. When principle is in question, we do not forget that the "blue" fought on one side and the "gray" on the other. Sympathy shall never make us blind to the fact "the war for the rebellion was wrong, eternally wrong, and that for the Union was right, eternally right." For us, to whom belongs the triumph—a triumph due as much to the justice of our cause as to the valor of our arms; aye! our arms were valorous because our cause was just—for us, beyond sympathy stands principle. Need I remind you, at this hour, that the bitterness of tears is replaced by the grandeur of the recompense? A continent fertilized by the blood of heroes is bringing forth a harvest of material blessing and moral advancement.

Without question, the South was betrayed by local patriotism into national treason. Without question, too, and despite the recent outburst of retrospective enthusiasm, they have accepted the situation. Whatever was the immediate incentive to war, a moral cause determined the conflict. Organized slavery, the real issue, would be recalled by neither section, even were it possible to draw sectional lines again. Put a million armed men south of Mason and Dixon's line, and their leaders would not if they could, nor could they if they would, move them across the border as the knights errant of slavery. The pen of providence never wrote any historic decision more irrevocably than

Wm. G. Webber & Co. announce a three day's clearing sale of remnants and bargains beginning to-day. For the next two months each Friday this firm will make a special offering of remnants, and sell them while perfect at attractive prices. This week they will make the sale three days, and it will pay our lady readers to look in upon them. Their advertisement specifying some of the bargains was received too late for this issue, but we notice that they will offer 2500 yards of Cream Crinkle Cloth, 28 inches wide, at 5 cents a yard; 5000 yards Barnaby Fine Gingham, worth 25 cents, for 8 cents a yard, and lots of other bargains in the same proportion. This firm are doing a good business and is a popular place to trade.

Kent & Boynton are doing a very large business both in their ready made and custom department. They have as good a cutter in the latter department, as is to be found in the State, and this firm guarantee that everything shall be just as represented, or the money refunded. On this principle they are gaining many new friends.

Mineral Waters on draught, Aperient, Star and Appollinaris. Aperient Water is entirely original with ourselves a mild laxative and antidyspeptic, and has only to be tried to be appreciated. C. H & J. Price Apothecary, Salem.

TESTIMONIAL FROM PROF. BILL.

W. J. LEFAVOUR, Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to be able to endorse the Ivers & Pond piano. In resonance, volubility, firmness and purity of tone it will compare favorably with any piano made in the country. I heartily recommend it to the public and my friends who are intending to purchase. Yours truly, C. R. Bill, teacher of music in public schools.

The $35.00 ten piece Chamber Suits, selling at Paine's Furniture Company, Boston, are marvels of beauty and workmanship for the price.

Wednesdav Evening, June 9, 1886,

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Members of the W. C. T. U., sufficient to fill Quint's barge went to the Alms House last Sunday and conducted services. Mrs. M. O. Stevens opened the exercises by speaking of the purpose of the white ribboned women to make the world more home like, and in introducing the Y. W. C. T. U. and its president, Miss Hattie M. Saunders, to the congregation gathered in the chapel. Miss Saunders led in prayer and Miss E. P. Gordon of Auburndale gave a touching and impressive sermon from the text "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Two young ladies read poems, others gave testimonies, and Miss McPherson sang a beautiful song. Mrs. Phinney presided at the organ and led the singing which was very enjoyable. A bouquet of flowers, to which was attached a printed text, was given to every inmate of the house, every one seeming to enjoy the little show of sentiment.

The Convention in favor of Municipal Suffrage for women held in the Congregational Church, last Thursday, was a strong and able presentation of the question. The afternoon session was filled by such speakers as Dr. Sarah E. Sherman, Rev. Dr. E. C. Bolles and Mrs. Fielder Israel of Salem, Miss Cora Scott Pond of Boston, Mrs. Turner of Danvers, and Mr. J. Y. Bergen and Misses Floyd and Barrett of this town. Mrs. M. O. Stevens presided. In the evening Prof. Bergen ably filled the chair. The speakers were Mr. Carney of Tufts College, Divinity School, Mr. William Lloyd Garrison, Jr., and Rev. Annie H. Shaw of Boston, and Rev. Fielder Israel of Salem. Excellent music was rendered by a quartette from Reading.

The legislative committee gave the Enos Electric Supply Company leave to withdraw on their petition for the permit to build an electric railroad to the town of Winthrop. The report of the Committee, we are informed, was not accepted by the Legislature. The town of Winthrop had voted to put in the road, and appropriated money therefor. The Legislative Committee, therefore, will make a second trip to-night to Greenville, N.J., and examine the Enos road further. We understand that the car has been run by Mr. Daft around the curve and up the grade over the entire track there, by the use of one electric motor. This will make the road the most economical road in existence.

This makes us blush:—The Peabody PRESS shows a good deal of enterprise in issuing an extra the day before its regular edition, giving the particulars of a brutal wife murder, caused by strong drink. It is not easy for a weekly paper to break away from the regular work of the office, and at a moments notice lay the plans for a sixteen column paper, and get ahead of the flashy trashy, double repeating sensational reports of the myriads of assumed dailies. This the PRESS has done in this instance, and did it well.—Georgetown Advocate.

Mr. Albert Carlton has a very attractive home on Endicott street, right under the shadow of Buxton's hill. He has greatly improved the land since it came into his possession, and now raises all kinds of small fruits and vegetables, and has them at least two weeks ahead of most others in town. We learn that Mr. Carlton is desirous of purchasing and improving the land to the left of his house running down to the brook, and has made a liberal offer for it.

The property and franchise of the Salem Street Railway Company was formally transferred to the present lessees, the Naumkeag Company, on Tuesday. The transfer was made under the recent act of the Legislature permitting the sale.

The weather all this week has been delightfully June like and charming. It would puzzle the most accomplished weather maker in the land to provide anything that could beat it. New England climate is about as fine as is made anywhere when it is fine.

The "boss" carpenters of this town have decided to charge $3.00 a day for their men, and to request Mr. Aaron F. Clark to furnish them with lumber 10 per cent. cheaper than is charged those who do not belong to the trade.

The report of the Chief of Police for the month of May is as follows:—Whole number of arrests, 14, of which 7 were for drunkenness, 3 for assault, 1 for trespass and 1 for maintaining a liquor nuisance. Whole number of lodgers, 25.

Three Chinese named Wah Yin, Lee War and Lee Yi were in town Saturday looking for a store where they could sell tea, coffee, etc. They examined the store in Hartnett's block. They have a store in the western part of the state.

A new curb stone has been laid on Washington street from Dalton's Court to the Washington House.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

In the police court Thursday morning the liquor case of Mary McCloskey was called, and she plead guilty and was fined $50 and costs and three months in the house of correction. Appealed.

Joshua Patterson, who assaulted Thomas Conway on Washington street Memorial day, was fined $3 and costs Thursday.

Some miscreant threw a stone through the front window of Mrs. Hazen Ayers' house on Washington street, last Monday night, scattering the glass in all directions.

Some one poisoned a valuable setter dog belonging to A. H. Whidden, by feeding him ground glass. The fellow who did this mean act should be treated to a dose of his own medicine.

Some one broke into the store of Mrs. James Corbett on Tremont street last Friday and stole $10 from the money drawer, and a quantity of tobacco and cigars.

Fred Wiley on Lowell street had a brood of nineteen Brahma chicks stolen from his hen house last Sunday. That is provoking.

A boy named John Bagley living on Mt. Vernon street badly cut his hand with a sickle last Monday.

A lively runaway occurred on Main street yesterday afternoon. A team owned by a Salem stable keeper, started on Wallis street, by the horse becoming frightened at the dropping of one end of the shafts. As they went around the corner into Main street he threw the driver out, and taking the sidewalk, he did no damage till he reached Benjamin Wheeler's, when he collided with the fence, and broke several pickets. Continuing his mad career he upset a lot of dry goods at M'Carthy's store and one of the traces struck a little girl knocking her down, but doing no serious injury. After turning the corner of Caller street, there was a collision, which made complete kindling wood of the buggy, and the horse ran a short distance and then stopped. Things were lively for a few minutes, and it is fortunate no one was injured.

Mr. Alfred Taylor, in the employ of Dole & Osgood, mounted an insecurely constructed stage yesterday, and it broke down throwing him to the ground and badly bruising his lower limbs and shaking him up.

One of C. F. Hathaway's baker teams started on a little trip of its own this morning, and brought up at the bake shop without serious damage.

A four horse team belonging to J. B. Thomas broke through the Boston street sewer last Wednesday night, and a large lot of wood was spilled on the ground.

The police were notified Thursday that a ten year old girl named Gertrude Marrs living on Shillaber street had disappeared. The last seen of her she was sent by her folks with fifty cents to a dry goods store. She was found Friday with friends in Boston.

Mr. H. C. Newell, of Cambridge, made a visit to Danvers Asylum last Sunday on his bicycle, and was coasting down Central street when his wheel struck the railroad track and gave him a severe header and injured the brake to his machine.

Mrs. Catherine Foley was so unfortunate last Friday as to overthrow an oil stove, which was on her kitchen stove, while she was doing the family ironing. A little of the oil was spilled on the stove and caught fire but was quickly extinguished by the use of a rug.

A man named Warren Gilford, while out with his gun in Lynnfield woods Memorial day, accidentally shot himself in the wrist by the premature explosion of his gun. He did not receive the whole charge, only a few stray shot entering his wrist.

A lively runaway occurred last Thursday on Aborn street. A young man named Collins was driving a spirited team loaded with hay and slid down on the tongue of the wagon to fix the harness when the horses started. He jumped on the back of one of them and as they went around the corner of Boston street the load tipped over and the horses were stopped. No damage was done.

Monday, morning as, Parsons' fish team was going down Oak street, a wheel came off and a boy named Keating who was with the driver was thrown to the ground and his face was considerably bruised.

A child living in the vicinity of Mr. Elbridge Rust's factory had a narrow escape last Friday. In the rear of the factory was a large hole about full of water, into which the child fell, and its screams called to the scene some women living in the tenement houses near by, who rescued the child.

In the superior court in Salem, last Thursday, Dennis Weare, drunkenness, fined $16.23; Stephen Weare, assault, $3 and costs, $13.25; David Toomey, assault, $10 and costs, $15; Timothy T. Riordan, on the liquor case that was put on file last year, was fined $100 and costs.

Mr. Lyman B. Nichols, while at work on the old barn on the Henry King estate, was thrown to the ground with a ladder which slipped, and had his lip cut and he was given a good shaken up.

The case of David T. Winter vs Lake Erie and Western R. R. is expected to come before this term of the superior court.

Last Saturday night a team driven by Mr. C. H. Tigh of this town collided with a horse car in Salem but did no serious damage, although for a minute it looked as if there would be a wreck.

About two weeks ago a resident of Dublin bought a young brindle bull dog which proved to be so ugly that he had him chained. A few days afterwards his wife went to unchain him and he began to play and jump on her and knocked her down and bit her on the hand and arm, and would have done more serious damage but for the arrival of her husband who chained the brute and afterwards killed him. The affair has been kept quiet.

When the freight track to T. E. Proctor's factory was built it was run temporarily up in the drying yard opposite the shop and has not since been changed. Last Friday there were five cars on the track, three of which were empty, and an attempt was made to run down what the foreman thought was an empty car, and the trig was removed and they all started not being unshackled. The heavier cars being behind pushed the others along and the speed increased rapidly. Several attempts were made to stop them but in vain. As they reached the bridge they struck a sleeper causing the first two cars to jump the track, and they then crushed through on the corner of a two story carpenter shop and tore out the basement wall for ten or fifteen feet. The cars were also badly wrecked. Eugene Courtney, an employe of Mr. Proctor, was at work on the brake of the third car, and when it struck he was thrown violently against the brake. He was taken to his home and Doctor Pike attended him. It was found that one rib was fractured, another cracked, and one hip badly bruised. He was somewhat injured it is feared internally. The damage will be several hundred dollars.

It was quite a surprise to our citizens to hear last Friday that Mr. James E. Millea, the former proprietor of the "Woodbine," who jumped his bail in February, 1885, had given himself up and taken sentence at the Superior Court in Salem. His sentence was six months in the house of correction and a fine of $250. We learn that he has agreed also not to engage in the liquor business in Peabody.

A man named Renecks fell in a drunken fit on Central street, last Sunday, but came out of it after a while.

There are two brothers living not far from the square, who can't seem to agree. One of them recently had a new suit of clothes built for him, and to prevent his brother wearing them out before he got ready to wear them for Sunday, he had a new lock put on his door. This the brother forced, and appeared on the streets a short time after, dressed in a becoming new suit.

James Lafreniere, the barber under Baldwin's hotel, has a very intelligent and valuable little dog. He performs lots of tricks and his master is very much attached to him. One day last week a big Newfoundland dog attacked him and bit a piece of skin as large as a hen's egg out of his body.

The friends of Prof. Albert C. Perkins, of Brooklyn, N. Y., formerly of our high school, will sympathize with him in the loss of his second daughter Gertrude, who recently died of consumption at their home in Brooklyn, after a short illness. The remains were brought to Topsfield, the old home of Prof. Perkins and his wife, and interred in the family burial lot.

More about Silks.
The Latest, with old and new facts made prominent.

When we issued our advertisement of Special Silk Sale a few weeks ago, we did so from the conscientious assurance that our stock of Silks was of such quality and prices that the unvarnished facts in regard to them would bear us out in any statement, however strong we might make.

During the last few weeks, the results of our plain speaking are so satisfactory, that we underscore it all to make it more emphatic. The comments of customers, and the steady reduction of stock, are sufficient guarantees.

We do not claim to sell Silks below the cost to manufacture, other dealers may, we have no objection. We do business to make money; that we admit at the outset. But we do claim that the prices at which we have been and are selling Silks are nearer the cost of manufacture than ever before. That is more to your advantage than ours, because we must now sell several yards to make the profit that was realized formerly "UNDER THE OLD ORDER OF THINGS." from the sale of one yard.

We repeat and facts warrant it, that our stock of desirable Silks in all fashionable colors and black, is better than ever before shown; that is saying a good deal, for our stock has never been inferior to any.

Special opportunities the past few days have put us in the way to obtain some very choice lots of Silks, which the largest houses in the country would be glad to place on their counters. This is not idle speech. Representatives of such houses have so expressed themselves. We ask your critical examination of our Silks, and shall be satisfied with your verdict, knowing in advance what it must be.

in time. Kidney diseases may be prevented by purifying, renewing, and invigorating the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When, through debility, the action of the kidneys is perverted, these organs rob the blood of its needed constituent, albumen, which is passed off in the urine, while worn out matter, which they should carry off from the blood, is allowed to remain. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the kidneys are restored to proper action, and Albuminuria, or is prevented. Ayer's Sarsaparilla also prevents inflammation of the kidneys, and other disorders of these organs. Mrs. Jas. W. Weld, Forest Hill st., Jamaica Plain, Mass., writes: "I have had a complication of diseases, but my greatest trouble has been with my kidneys. Four bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla made me feel like a new person; as well and strong as ever." W. M. McDonald, 46 Summer st., Boston, Mass., had been troubled for years with Kidney Complaint. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, he not only the disease from assuming a fatal form, but was restored to perfect health. John McLellan, cor. Bridge and Third sts., Lowell, Mass., writes: "For several years I suffered from Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint, the latter being so severe at times that I could scarcely attend to my work. My appetite was poor, and I was much emaciated; but by using my appetite and digestion improved, and my health has been perfectly restored."

Bright's Disease

Prevented

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

Poet's Corner.

Colonel Bob's Gift.

It was a gray and grizzled band.
Survivors they of twenty years,
Who wore the blue and saved the land,
And found the laurel drenched in tears;
For victors's wreath was dearly bought.
The empty sleeve, the crutch, the scar,
Bore living witness how they fought,
These comrades of the G. A. R.

To-day they come with sweet intent,
For them a task of holy love,
To help to raise a monument
Where lie the comrades called above;
When, as they talked, the white-haired chief
Arose, and with a husky sob
Said: "Comrades all, 'tis my belief
You'd like to hear from Colonel Bob."

He held a letter in his hand,
And read it through with trembling tone;
"Comrades," he read. "I want to stand
A share in that great pile o' stone,
An' though I hain't got much to send
You won't despise my humble aid,
For every brave man is my friend;
I was in Stonewall's old brigade!

I want to add—though lackin' space—
We all were comrades through that job,
Some side by side, some face to face
And them's my feelin's. Colonel Bob."
The reader paused; a tender look
Across each rugged visage played.
And then a cheer the rafters shook
For Colonel Bob and his Brigade.

What Will The End Be?

What is the end to be for us, dear heart,
Who find ourselves in Love's fair wonder land.
Led on by some compelling hand.
Yet fettered so, we must remain apart—
What is the end to be
For you and me?

What will the end be, dear? I cannot see:
The glory of the midday sun is such
It blinds my eyes; I only know I touch
Your garment's hem—that you are near to me,
But what the end will be
I cannot see.

And yet what end? So well, so well we know
Outside this land so strangely fair
There waits for us the blacknesss of despair;
I will not leave Love's rays, nor let you go.
What'er the end may be
You go with me.

Whate'er the end we will not turn aside!
All pitying Christ, who watchest from above,
Is it not strange so much goes wrong thro' Love
When for dear Love's sake thou hast died?
Whate'er the end may be,
Lord, Love led me.

The Lament Of The Obelisk.

I am crumbling, Egypt, crumbling,
In this climate of the free,
And I grumble, as I crumble,
That they severed you and me.

And my tenderest thoughts go outward
To those centuries the while
That I stood in perfect beauty
And adored the wending Nile.

Gentle breezes kissed my forehead,
Fragrant waters laved my feet,
And I held the graven secrets
With a vigilance complete.

But these sacrilegious moderns
Saw the product of thy skill,
And their curious disposition
Nerved a never-conquered will.

I was brought across the ocean
And erected here to be—
Oh, the shame of my condition!—
Just a curiosity.

I am crumbling, Egypt, crumbling!
Of my shame, accept this sign—
And they're painting me, O Egypt,
With some horrid parrafine.

—Columbus Dispatch.

Come, Swallow, Come.

Come, swallow, come, for thee we wait;
Come, seek thy Northern home anew,
Where pale spring flowers are delicate,
And winter skies are changed to blue,
Come, swallow, come, for thee we wait.

Come, swallow, come, for thee we wait;
The thatch is warm beneath the sun.
Here tell of love to thy fond mate;
Today should see thy nest begun.
Come, swallow, come, for thee we wait.

Come swallow, come, for thee we wait;
The spring is perfect but for thee;
Ah! welcome, though thou speedest late,
Thy truant wings from o'er the sea.
Welcome, for not in vain we wait.

THREE EFFECTS.—The thousands of remarkable cures which have been accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla are due simply to three effects which this great medicine has upon those who take it:
First: It purifies the blood
Second: It strengthens the system.
Third: It gives healthy action to the digestive organs.

Low shoes and "clock" socks are now the correct thing.

Smart Weed and Belladonna combined with the other ingredients used in the best porous plasters make Carter's S. W. & B Backache Plasters the best in the market. Price 25 cents.

INDIGESTION

To strengthen the stomach, create an appetite, and remove the horrible depression and despondency which result from Indigestion, there is nothing so effective as Ayer's Pills. These Pills contain no calomel or other poisonous drug, act directly on the digestive and assimilative organs, and restore health and strength to the entire system. T. P. Bonner, Chester, Pa., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills for the past 30 years and am satisfied I should not have been alive to-day, if it had not been for them. They me of Dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since." L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills, for Liver troubles and Indigestion, a good many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action." Richard Norris, Lynn, Mass., writes: "After much suffering, I have been cured of Dyspepsia and Liver troubles

By Using

Ayer's Pills. They have done me more good than any other medicine I have ever taken." John Burdett, Troy, Iowa, writes: "For nearly two years my life was rendered miserable by the horrors of Dyspepsia. Medical treatment afforded me only temporary relief, and I became reduced in flesh, and very much debilitated. A friend of mine, who had been similarly afflicted, advised me to try Ayer's Pills. I did so, and with the happiest results. My food soon ceased to distress me, my appetite returned, and I became as strong and well as ever."

Book Notices.

The "Country Week," conducted by the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, has given since its inauguration in 1875, more than fifteen thousand of the poor children of the city the pleasure of a ten days' visit in the country in summer, a pleasure which they would not otherwise have enjoyed. Aside from the benefit to health, of which there is abundant evidence, the visitors have gained much morally from the change in surroundings and influences; and this is especially true of those children who have been received in families as guests. The influence of home life thus received is the greatest benefit that can be derived from the visit, and often has an effect upon the whole future life of the visitor. Work for the present season has already commenced. The children are ready, the homes are wanted. If you are willing to invite one or more children to visit in your home during the summer, address Miss Ellen H. Bailey, Secretary, 18 Boylston Street, Boston, who will furnish any further information desired. Fares will be paid by the Committee.

The June number of the young Ladies' Journal which was received from the International News Company was equal in all respects to previous numbers and contents, to be the leading fashion journal. It is published in England as a weekly, and in this country as a monthly. It contains more fashions and designs in fancy work than any two American journals, add its growth in this country has been something wonderful. You can secure a copy of it by applying to Mrs. Gilson. Try it.

A WONDERFUL BOOK.—We should judge, by the wording of the advertisement in another column of this paper, that the new book entitled "The World's Wonders," is indeed a wonderful book. It will pay the curious, as well as those seeking employment, to read the advertisement. The Historical Publishing Co. offers to give standard books free to persons who will send them names of book agents. They also offer to start people without capital in a business that will pay from $15 to $50 a day—a pretty good income for these hard times. Read the advertisement.

Three members of my family, says Mr. James A. Sample, Cash Room, office of the Treasurer, U. S., who were suffering from aggravating coughs, have been much benefited by taking Red Star Cough Cure. None of the ill effects so noticeable in other cough remedies, have followed the use of this.

You had better walk up to the town clerk's office and take out a license for "yer pup," because it is most time to issue a warrant to the officers to prosecute the owners of unlicensed canines, and send them to the happy hunting grounds.

A CENTURY of progress has not produced a remedy equal to Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Hay Fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff but is perfectly safe and easily applied with the finger. It gives immediate relief and cures the worst cases. Price 50 cents.

I was troubled with catarrh for seven years previous to commencing the use of Ely's Cream Balm, some five months ago. It has done for me what other so-called cures failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Balm seemed like magic. Clarence L. Huff, Biddeford, Me.

THE LADIES'

DONGOLA!

OFFICE OF ORDWAY & CLARK,

MANUFACTURERS OF

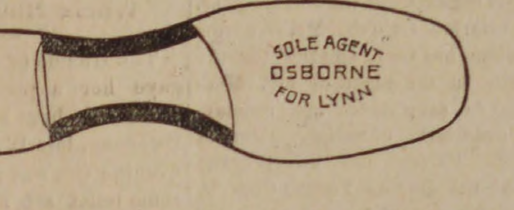
LADIES' FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.

HAVERHILL, MASS., February 25, 1886.

MR. WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

DEAR SIR: We have this day sent you a large invoice of our justly celebrated DONGOLA BOOTS. You will find they are all that has been claimed for them, and far ahead and entirely different from Kangaroo, Glove or Mat Kid. There is no other boot made for Ladies' wear which, for softness of finish, elegance of fit combined with such lasting durability, will give the entire satisfaction of this boot. They are something that has long been needed, as they wear better than French or American Kid, and will not stretch, turn purple, or look rusty. So popular and unprecedented has become the demand for these goods throughout the country, as the merits of the leather have become known, and so limited the importation of skins out of which the goods are manufactured, and so many imitations under similar names have been placed upon the market, that it has been found necessary to copyright the name.

NONE ARE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED WITH OUR AGENTS NAME UPON THE SOLE, THUS:



Also the word "DONGOLA" upon the inside lining.

We shall give you the EXCLUSIVE SALE OF THESE BOOTS IN YOUR CITY, feeling confident with your large trade that they will find a ready market, judging from the large sales they have met with in other cities. Respectfully yours,

ORDWAY & CLARK.

SPARKS.

Steamer Company No. 2 have just had their company room at the Central Station thoroughly renovated and refurnished. The ceiling has been kalsomined and now shows a clear white while the walls have received a new coat of a light tint of paint with borders in dark maroon. At the foot of the border is a gold and black moulding which adds to the effect. A new Lowell carpet with a small but handsome figure covers the floor, and new bent wood chairs with woven cane seats and backs, of an entirely new design in mahogany, have been added. A pair of handsome lounges, upholstered in Brussels and brocade plush together with the new curtains to match the walls, rugs and mats, all combine to make the room as handsome as any in the house. The painting was done by George F. Ward and the furnishing by Charles H. Goulding, under the direction of the committee appointed by the company, consisting of the Clerk, J. B. Reith, George F. Currier and George N. Miller, at an outlay of about $140. The company will dedicate their room next Tuesday evening with a supper, complimentary to the firemen in the Central station and a number of invited guests.

The Hook & Ladder Company were out for practice Monday evening, putting up the Bangor extension and several other ladders on the W. M. Jacobs shop on Main street. After this the Bangor was put up on the Soldier's monument, and the rope which has been hanging at the base of the figure for nearly a year was taken down. The company at their meeting voted to purchase a new set of fire hats for service.

Hose Company No. 3 did some lively work at a trial last Monday night. They hitched up their horse, run a mile, and laid 200 feet of hose in just two minutes. The horse used by this company is owned by Mr. A. P. Bodge and is well trained and seems to enjoy the work.

The Fire Alarm Committee held a meeting Monday afternoon, President Stover of the Gamewell company being present. Nothing definite was done. The whistle and some of the boxes will arrive this week.

The time for the payment of dues of the Relief Association expires next Tuesday, the 15th.

William Brown was elected clerk of Hose Company No. 1., at the meeting Monday evening, in place of William F. T. Gunn resigned.

The Board of Engineers held their regular meeting last Wednesday evening. They approved bills and purchased a number of new hydrants.

Mrs. Lydia (Prescott) Smith, daughter of William A. Prescott, died last Friday morning at the latter's residence on Mason street, after an illness of about two weeks. She was a native of Peabody, but has spent most of her married life in Salem. A husband and four children survive her. Her funeral took place Monday.

The following is the report of the engineer of the pumping station for the month of May:—Number of gallons pumped, 18,038,370; average per day, 581,879; pounds of coal used for the month, 43,018; average per day, 1388; gallons of water pumped per pound of coal, 419 3-10. Running time per day, 7 hours 16 minutes.

There will be an adjourned meeting of the O. L. H. A. S. at the Universalist Vestry, Friday, June 11, at 4 P. M.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The choir at St. John's Church, under the direction of Charles A. Clark, Esq., are doing some very creditable work. It is entirely a volunteer choir, yet they have two rehearsals a week and the music rendered in their church and selected by Mr. Clark is of great musical value. Last Sunday they gave Farmer's Mass in B flat, in the morning, and Millard's Vespers in D flat in the afternoon. Such music as this, even selections from these works, seem formidable to the ordinary professional choir, and when it is considered that these works were given entire, solos and all, we are reminded that it is no ordinary work they are doing. We learn from Mr. Clark that the choir have a repertoire of about twelve masses and several vespers—any one of which they are prepared to render at any service. It represents work, and hard work, on the part of the director, and Mr. Clark is entitled to much credit for it. In the performance of Millard's Vespers Sunday afternoon, the choir showed the result of careful training. The solos by Miss Alice Ducey, Miss Burke and Mr. Horrigan were carefully rendered, the bass solo of Mr. Horrigan being entitled to especial praise. He has a voice capable of easily filling the entire edifice, and his work Sunday afternoon would have done credit to any choir. Previous to the rosary Mrs. Fernald sang Mercadante's Salve Maria (Hail Mary.)

Several changes in the personell of our choirs were noticeable last Sunday. Some of them were only temporary and others, we are informed, will be permanent. June 1st begins a new year at many of the churches, and at this time the music is engaged for the coming year. At the Unitarian Church, Mr. Andrew Fitz, of Salem, has been singing for the past month in the place of Mr. Macgregor, and he sang there last Sunday. Miss E. Dora Clark, of Salem, sister of Charles A. Clark, and at present organist of the Barton Square Church, officiated as organist in place of Mr. Upton. It is understood that the new organ at this church is to be put in during the summer vacation, so that with the beginning of the services in the fall this church will have one of the finest organs in town.

Miss Lillie W. Perry, of Danvers, sang soprano in the choir of the Baptist Church last Sunday. Mr. Fred C. Blake sang there in place of Mr. Eri Littlefield, who was obliged to be absent.

Mr. Sawyer, of Malden, for the past year tenor at the South Church, has severed his connection with the choir. We understand the Society are desirous of obtaining a tenor residing in this vicinity. The singing by this choir last Sunday was particularly good. Their voices are better balanced than any other in town.

We understand that the Lew Quintette, with Sam Lucas and a specialty company, expect to appear in the Town Hall shortly.

The new organ which will be put in at the Unitarian Church in August is being built by Geo. S. Hutchings of Boston for the Society. It will be a two manual organ and will be built to take nearly the place of the old one—probably about three feet wider. The reputation of Mr. Hutchings assures a good organ. Some of the finest ones in Salem were made by this gentleman, and the choir and organists who have wrestled with the old organ for years are to be congratulated. Not every one outside of those in the choir seats knows how much these congratulations mean. Of course the organist puts the best side of the organ before the congregation, and they often never know the tricks and schemes resorted to to cover up the defects which would be plainly evident if they were not skilful enough to avoid them. The organ at this church will be run by a water motor instead of the old method with a bellows.

The School Committee of this town will build elevated seats on the stage of the Town Hall for the use of the children participating in the musical exhibition June 17.

Miss Mamie Upton, of Salem, so well and favorably known in connection with Bennett & Moulton's Opera Company, will be united in matrimony to-morrow to a New York gentleman.

The Boston Home Journal has this to say regarding the promenade concerts in Music Hall, now under the direction of John C. Mullaly: "The promenade concerts at Music Hall will be a decided boon to the stay-at-homes. There are some few hundred thousand individuals whose fortunes—or misfortunes—compel them to remain in town throughout the summer, and the promenades will tend to lessen for them the burden of hot weather life. Last season's concerts were so highly successful that people began to wonder how they had managed to get along so many years without them, and they certainly led to the conclusion that a little more of this respectable bohemianism in Bostonian entertainments would be a most delectable thing. Bostonians have been wont to take their pleasures sadly, and it is hoped that the promenade concerts will incite some enterprising manager to establish for the winter season some entertainment which shall be equally unconventional, equally delightful, quite as bohemian and fully as respectable. Theatres and lectures and chamber concerts and symphonies do not altogether fill the bill. Will some one take the hint?"

The Musical Herald for June is on our table. It contains a very choice quartette for female voices, "Heavenly Father Grant Thy Blessing," and "Thou art the Rest," instrumental, by Schubert. It contains much interesting reading, among which the following regarding Music in the Home is peculiarly true: "It is passing strange that people do not make greater use of vocal and instrumental music to brighten the home life. Too many look upon it only as a means for earning a livelihood, when there are thousands of homes where it is needed merely for its purifying and elevating influences. There is no place where it is more important, and nowhere else does it shine with a brighter lustre. Even if there be no very marked talent in this direction which would lead to the idea of display before the public, it is well worth while to make the most of such as there may be; and those parents who ignore music because the son or daughter may give no promise of eminence as musicians are sadly in error. If right views concerning this subject could generally prevail, we should hear less of wailing because young people incline to spend their evenings away from home amid excitements which are not for their best good; and we steadfastly believe that many a hearthstone is shrouded in gloom simply from neglecting the wonderful power which might have been wielded, through music, in making home more attractive and filling it with sunshine. Among the great reforms needed in our land to-day, few are of equal importance with that of making the home-life more pure, beautiful and attractive."

The third annual concert by Mr. W. T. Lefavour's pupils will be given on Friday evening, June 11, at O. U. A. M. Hall, 175 Essex street, Salem. None will be admitted without a ticket, which can be had free of the pupils.

Where Hours go Merrily.

The friends of Miss Mary Sweeney gave her a pleasant surprise at the home of her brother, Officer John Sweeney, last Wednesday. During the evening she was presented with a handsome toilet set and her brother gave her her ticket to Ireland and 6£ 10s for pin money.

The strawberry festival at the Universalist church was well patronized last Thursday evening and everyone was much pleased with the dance and entertainment given by the little folks. They are always introducing some new novelty which is appreciated by a liberal patronage.

Last Thursday evening Mr. Cornelius T. Mullane, son of Timothy Mullane, of English street, was united in marriage to Miss Annie Murphy of Salem. The PRESS extends congratulations.

A glass ball shoot took place at the Forest street range last Thursday, and George D. Walton made 22 out of a possible 30, and continues to hold the medal.

Masconomo Tribe of Improved Order of Red Men kindled its council fire at the wigwam, last Thursday evening. Several fathoms were added to the wampum belt. A set of by-laws was adopted, and there were several long talks from the brethren. The Council fire was quenched at the 11th breath, and new chiefs will be twigged for, when the fire is rekindled.

Miss Annie Warner recently entertained a party of her young friends on her birthday. It was a very pleasant occasion. A May queen was chosen and she presided with all the grace and dignity imaginable.

The strawberry festival last Wednesday evening by the W. C. T. U. was well attended. The entertainment consisted of select readings by H. Grahame Wheeler and a recitation and song by Miss Lina McPherson. Miss Bertha Plummer of Lynn also sang. The Chichester sisters sang a duet and others contributed toward its success.

Mrs. Harriet Walker, mother of Mr. William F. Walker on Main street, was 84 years of age last Monday, and while she held no reception a large number of her friends remembered her and called to congratulate her, among them several of her former pupils when she taught school. We are glad to learn that she is at present enjoying excellent health and in the possession of all her faculties. The following pretty poem was sent by a friend in Salem and several of the callers listened to Mrs. Walker while she read it to them:

TO AUNT HARRIET.

AT 84 YEARS.

Hail! all hail! to this fair morning
  With its glad birthday,
May its influence cheer and gladden,
Banishing all thoughts that sadden
  From your heart away.

Very swiftly fly the seasons,
  Counting off the years
From our sight, so quickly speeding,
To us each, a lesson reading,
  Filled with hopes and fears.

Standing now upon the portal
  Of an untried year,
Knowing not what may befall us,
Or, where duty fain may call us,
  May our faith be clear.

Strengthened and supported daily
  By the thought so true,
That whenever cares oppressing
Fill our hearts with thoughts depressing,
  Grace will help us through.

And, whene'er the cross is heavy,
  Added strength is given;
While our burdens will be lightened,
And our hopes and spirits brightened,
  By sweet thoughts of Heaven.

In your home may every blessing
  Be without alloy;
Happiness to him who caring
Daily for you, never spareth
  Aught to give you joy.

And may all, who gather round you,
  Friends and kindred dear,
Find from your experience gleaning,
Much to clearer make the meaning,
  Of their life work here.

T. W. C.

About 100 brothers of Holten Lodge, I. O. O. F. were present at their Lodge room last evening, besides about 50 members of Glenmere Lodge of Lynn, and visiting brothers from Salem. The work of the first and second degree was finely executed by the degree staff of Glenmere Lodge, and the visiting brothers were loudly applauded for their excellent work. On the "good of the order" remarks of an appropriate nature were made by the visiting bretheren after which the company adjourned to the town hall, and sat down to a strawberry lunch prepared by Janitor Patterson. The visiting brothers returned by special car about 1 o'clock. A pleasant feature of the occasion was the presentation of the Lodge with an elegant basket of flowers, by Bro. B. D. Hill, which in turn were presented to the Noble Grand of Glenmere Lodge. Each member was also presented with a buttonhole bouquet.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. J. B. Thomas has got part of the lumber on his farm for the new barn which he is about to have built.

The L. & B Co. have nearly completed the grading of their track at this end of the road.

Mr. F. E. Newhall comes out with a newly painted ice cart this week.

Mr. Alonzo Raddin has had improvements made in and around his shoe shop on Lynnfield street, including painting.

The Lynn & Boston horse railroad carried 1590 through passengers last Sunday.

Mr. Benjamin F. Wiggin had his right arm scratched and poisoned while about his work recently.

David Lee of South Peabody and Henry Tobey had some trouble last Sunday, and the latter received a black eye. Lee appeared in the police court last Monday morning, but as the assault could not be proved, he was discharged.

A band of roving Turks invaded our village last Friday, and created quite a sensation by their uncivilized appearance and the queer antics they cut with a performing bear. They were near the horse car station, when some one said the police were coming, and fearing they would give them " the run out of town" they started instanter. The itinerant tribe continued to the gipsy camp, but got a cold shoulder there, and continued to Lynn.

THE
GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE
For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of
B. LAURANCE'S
Axis Cut Pebbles.
The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name, it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in freestone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. A. C. P. and can only be purchased from

A petition is in circulation by those of our citizens who are patrons of the B. & M. Railroad asking that road to make decided changes in its new time table as affecting this town.

A simple remedy for neuralgia is to apply a grated horse radish, prepared the same as for table use, to the temple when the face or head is afflicted, or to the wrist when the pain is in the arm or shoulder.

It is now in order for the thrifty housewife to look after the young chickens, grease them and fix them up a "score" of other remedies for the gapes, which always prevails to an alarming extent in the spring.

There are rumors that the Danvers street railroad will build their road to Lynnfield, and from Washington street through Aborn to the Naumkeag track on Boston street. Go in and do it, that is what the people want to see.

Our citizens who are appointed administrators, etc., by the Probate Court, should by all means bring their notices to the PRESS for publication, and thus ensure their being conspicuously placed before the public.

The Odd Fellows Mutual Benefit of Essex North have levied two assessments, 160 and 161, on account of the death of John A. Upton, Lawrence, and Amos Norton of Newburyport. In classes A and B they have 1750 members.

At the Republican State convention in Lewiston, Me., Wednesday, Hon. J. R. Bodwell, of Hallowell, was nominated for Governor almost unanimously. He is the man who built the Soldiers' monument on the square, and is very popular in his state.

The Boston & Lowell Railroad company have added two new passenger cars to their rolling stock. One is a baggage and smoking car combined; it will take the place of the one destroyed by the collision at North Woburn; it has a seating capacity for 50 persons, and is numbered 3; the other, a passenger car, is provided with the most approved facilities for ventilation, heating, etc.

It is is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than it is for a woman to pass a millinery store at this season of the year without jabbing her husband in the ribs with her elbow and asking him to look at that duck of a bonnet.

The very desirable estate situated on Webster and Union streets will be sold at public auction next Friday at 12.30. It will be divided into house lots and furnishes a fine opportunity for a young man to secure the foundation of a permanent home.

Dr. Geo M. Frost is a director of the Beckford Railroad Station Indicator Company. The object is to put an appliance in cars to announce automatically by signs, the station the train is approaching. Mr. John P. Peabody is President of the company.

Tickets from Salem to Newport, Vt., and return, good for six days, can be obtained for $7 at the North Depot, by all wishing to witness the regatta on Lake Memphremagog, Saturday, June 19, in which Teemer, Ross, McKay and Ten Eyck will row.

The homeopathic physicians are receiving notices of the meetings of the Hahnemannian Association on the 24th and of the American institute of homeopathy on the 28th at Saratoga. Round trip tickets, good till July 20, are sold from Boston for $7.00.

The Boston & Maine Railroad has extended an invitation to President Cleveland and bride to take a trip over the road and branches this season. When he comes up on this branch, the directors will probably point with pride to the beautiful fountain in front of the station.

The next meeting of the Essex Conference of Liberal Christian Churches will be held in Gloucester on Wednesday, June 23. Rev. George Batchelor will give a essay in the forenoon entitled, "Religion its own Best Evidence." In the afternoon, Rev. D. W. Morehouse, of Newburyport, will read an essay on the labor problem. "What is the rightful attitude of the Church towards it?" Tickets may be obtained at the railroad stations at reduced rates.

The contract for furnishing coal for the school houses in town was awarded to Merriam & Co., of Danvers. The prices are to be $4.34 per ton for Cumberland; $4.79 for egg and furnace; and $5.29 for stove. These are the lowest prices obtained by the School Board for coal.

It is understood that the County Commissioners are to give a hearing, perhaps in August, on the redistricting of the representative districts. This senatorial district should be changed so Salem could not have a majority of of delegates over all the rest of the districts combined.

The small boy now sticketh up his two fingers, which signifies: Come let us ramble through sylvan shades, to where the aqua murmureth gently o'er the pebbles, and clothed in nature's garb, cleave the water with our bodies. Or, in vulgar parlance, come on, boys, let's take a swim.

Look out for the festive lightning rod agent who agrees to encase the farm buildings with lightning rods for twenty-five dollars, and subsequently presents a bill for one hundred and twenty-five dollars — twenty-five dollars for the rods, and one hundred for putting them up.

Mr. D. B. Lord commenced work last Thursday on the new connections at the pumping station, and it was completed Sunday. It consisted in laying a new pipe from the pumps to the main and minor connections, by which a perfect circulation of water can be maintained should a similar break occur as that of last year.

Within the past week the tramps have been coming out in strong force from their winter haunts in the cities and large towns, and the country districts are again beginning to swarm with these worthless wanderers and pests to society. All such characters should be made to promptly leave town the instant they set their feet in it. Such policy is the only correct one to practice with this class of nomads, and if vigorously carried out for a few weeks will effectually abate the nuisance. There is no need of an honest man being a tramp.

Spring Opening.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT.

SECOND FLOOR

We cordially invite the Ladies of Salem and vicinity to our Opening of the largest and most carefully selected stock of Millinery Goods ever shown in this city, including Trimmed Bonnets and Round Hats, both imported and of our own design and execution. In Fancy Laces and Silk Lisses, we have many elegant patterns, and in some of the most delicate tints, fairly rivalling the shadings of nature. In Flowers, which are to be so largely used the coming season, we have a most attractive display, as fresh as from the garden, only lacking fragrance. We have also in Untrimmed Hats and Bonnets, a very large assortment from the strongest School Hat to the finest foreign make. In fact everything which goes to make up a complete stock. Mrs. A. C. Washburn, our manager, was in New York at the Importers' Opening in Feb. securing many choice things at that time, and has kept close watch of the market up to the present time. Having through years of experience formed a large acquaintance with Importing as well as Jobbing Houses, which gives her great advantage in selecting Desirable Styles and making Lowest Prices. Miss Sadie Bushby will remain with us, as will also Miss Etta Brown and Miss Hattie Gliddin. We have also secured the services of Miss Carrie Palmer, who will join our corps of popular sales ladies. And now we feel sure almost every lady calling on us next week, or after, will meet an old acquaintance who will gladly show them every attention, and will take a personal interest in pleasing.

SPRING, 1886.

We take pleasure in announcing to the Ladies of Salem and Essex County, that we have now open and ready for inspection our full line of Ladies, Misses and Children's Outside Garments, Wraps, Shawls, etc., for Spring and Summer wear. We may venture to say without any egotism, that our selections in this department far surpass anything we have previously offered. The increasing demand for superior Ready Made Garments and Suits has led us to exercise unusual care in selecting none but the best, both in material and workmanship, and we guarantee all to be just as represented. We have every style and quality a lady can wish for. Long Garments for driving and travelling, Short Wraps and Jackets for street wear in every available shade and colors, both Foreign and American make. Suits, stylish and of superior quality. Shawls, India Chuddas, Boucle, Cashmere, and Fancy Embroidered Scarfs in all grades and shades. Children's Garments, simply beautiful in Boucle, English, German and American Goods. Our Infants' Department requires especial mention for its variety of Long and Short Robes, Cloaks, Slips and Blankets.

Jersey Waists, fancy colors beaded. Mikado fronts, Vest fronts, Plain fronts and braided, in every variety; and a great many more equally good things that we have not space to mention.

We cordially invite you to come and see for yourselves, assuring all courteous attention, and any information we can bestow.

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER;

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made. We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bousley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated with courtesy, whether anything is esired or not

Poet's Corner.

Poor Little Joe.

Prop your eyes wide open, Joey,
Fur I've brought you sumpin' great.
Apples? No, a derned sight better;
Don't you take no interest? Wait!
Flowers, Joe—I knowed you'd like 'em—
Ain't them scrumptious? Ain't them high?
Tears, my boy? What's them fur, Joey?
There—poor little Joe! don't cry.

I was skippin' past a winder,
Where a bang-up lady sot,
All amongst a lot of bushes—
Each one climbin' from a pot;
Every bush had flowers on it—
Pretty? Mebbe not! Oh, no!
Wish you could have seen 'em growin',
It was such a stunnin' show.

Well, I thought of you, poor feller,
Lyin' here so sick and weak,
Never knowin' any comfort,
And I puts on lots of cheek.
"Missus," says I, "if you please, mum,
Could I ax you for a rose?
For my little brother, missus,
Never seed one, I suppose."

Then I told her all about you—
How I bringed you up, poor Joe,
(Lackin' women folks to do it),
Such a imp you was, you know—
Till yer got that awful tumble,
Jist as I had broke yer in,
Hard work, too, to earn your living,
Blackin' boots fur honest tin.

How that tumble crippled you,
So you couldn't hyper much—
How it hurted when I seen you
Fur the first time with your crutch,
"But," I says, "he's laid up now, mum,
'Pears to weaken every day."
Joe, she up and went to cuttin'—
That's the how of this bokay.

Say! It seems to me, ole feller,
You is quite yourself to-night;
Kind o' chirk—it's been a fortnit
Sence yer eyes has been so bright.
Better! Well, I'm glad to hear it,
Yes; theyr'e mighty pretty, Joe.
Smellin' of 'em made you happy?
Well, I thought it would, you know.

Never seed the country, did you?
Flowers growin' everywhere.
Sometime when you're better, Joey,
Mebbe I can take you there.
Flowers in Heaven? 'M—I s'pose so;
Dunno much about it, though;
Ain't as fly as what I might be
On them topics, little Joe.

But I've heard it hinted somewhere
That in Heaven's golden gates
Things is everlastin' cheerful—
B'leve that's what the Bible states.
Likewise, there folks don't get hungry;
So good people when they dies,
Finds themselves well fixed forever—
Joe, my boy, what ails you eyes?
Thought they looked a little sing'lar,
Oh, no! Don't you have no fear;
Heaven was made for such as you is—
Joe what makes you look so queer?
Here—wake up! Oh! don't look that way!
Joe! My boy! Hold up your head!
Here's your flowers—you dropped 'em, Joey,
Oh! my God! can Joe be dead!

Spinning.

HELEN HUNT.

Like a blind spinner in the sun
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task,
And, being blind, no more I ask.

I do not know the use or name
Of that I spin;
I only know that some one came
And laid within
My hand the thread, and said, since you
Are blind, but one thing you can do.

Sometimes the threads so rough and fast
And tangled fly,
I know wild storms are sweeping past,
And fear that I
Shall fall; but dare not try to find
A safer place, since I am blind.

I know not why, but I am sure
That tint and place,
In some great fabric to endure
Past time and race,
My threads will have; so, from the first,
Though blind, I never felt accurst.

I think, perhaps, this trust has sprung
From one short word
Said over me when I was young.
So young I heard
It, knowing not that God's name signed
My brow, and sealed me His, though blind.

But whether this be seal or sign
Within, without,
It matters not. The bond divine
I never doubt.
I know He set me here, and still,
And glad, and blind, I wait His will.

But listen, listen, day by day,
To hear their tread
Who bear the finished web away,
And cut the thread.
And bring God's message in the sun,
"Thou poor, blind spinner, work is done."

TRIP TO WENHAM.

Last week Sunday we took a trial trip over the Wenham extension of the Naumkeag Street Railway. We were informed by starter Tibbetts, who, by the way, is again stationed at the Salem station on Essex street, much to the delight of patrons of the road, that the cars run every hour. We asked him if there was likely to be plenty of room, and were told that if we remained at the office we might get a seat—and they ran three or four cars together, but when it got down to Bridge street there would not be much of a show. We found this to be literally true. Every seat was taken at the office before the driver had time to turn his horses around, and an extra car was put on at the stables,—an attempt to provide seats the remainder of the journey for those who were standing, many of them being ladies and children. But the relief was only apparent. Before we got through Beverly every available space in the three cars was taken. But the crowd was a good natured one. Sometimes the car would get stuck rounding a curve, considerable ingenuity was necessary in passing at a turnout, and the passengers who were hanging on the side would bring up suddenly against a tree on the side of the road, when the rails ran conveniently near. Once the conductor got served in that fashion, but all were above such little vexations, and bound on seeing Wenham and the Soldiers Monument there.

The ride is a beautiful one, as far as scenery is concerned. The farmers' houses looked thrifty and in good condition, and the advent of the horse car is beyond doubt a theme of much interest. At every pane of glass there was a head watching the movements of the cars, wondering whether to regard the innovation with favor or otherwise. On the car went till we reached Wenham, when we were told that we had 40 minutes before the car returned. Some took barges for Asbury Grove, others wandered around the Monument and square, but more kept their seats in the cars lest they should lose them on the return trip, which precaution was wise. For when the horses came out to start for Salem, it seemed as if the crowd in the cars was larger than ever. There is little doubt of the success of the Wenham extension as far as the travel is concerned—particularly on Sunday. It seemed to us that if double the number of cars had been run, there would have been an equal crowd on the cars. The extension is being pushed to Asbury Grove, and by June 17th, it is expected to have cars running. We presume the 40 minutes wait will then be used up in the trip to the Grove and return from Wenham center. The large travel shows that the possibilities for horse car travel in the open cars, for pleasure, are almost unlimited in the vicinity of Salem.

The Fitchburg railroad company announces as their attractions for the grand temperance celebration at Lake Walden and Lake Pleasant on Monday, July 5, 1885, the noted Georgia revivalists, Sam Jones and Sam Small, familiary known as the "Two Sams." In addition to these celebrated speakers, there will be other addresses by men of note and leaders in the cause of temperance, and at Lake Walden there will be music by the Waltham Watch Company band and the well known Oxford male quartette of Boston. At Lake Pleasant the Fitchburg band and the famous Temple quartette will assist. Other sterling attractions will be announced later, together with a more detailed account of the exercises. The celebration will be under the management of the Chickering Musical Bureau of Boston.

Edward P. Moulton, plumber, No. 28 Norman street, Salem, has a card in this issue. Mr. Moulton does good work and we recommend him to the attention of our readers.

A correspondent wants to know how many of our churches comply with the intent of the law in regard to having their doors open outwards. We don't know, so we can't tell. Newspaper editors are supposed to be posted a good deal better on almost any other subject than church doors. We refer the question to the pastor of the bethel.

Our readers are reminded that the place to obtain boots and shoes of all kinds is at the store of L. Cunningham, 147 Essex street, Salem. He keeps the finest of goods and his prices are low.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is circulating petitions among influential ecclesiastical and temperance bodies, asking them to join in a petition to the International Committee of the Evangelical Alliance that one day in the week of prayer be devoted to prayer for the abolition of the liquor traffic.

Peabody horse cars to Lynn pass by the shoe store of J. E. Hodgkins, No. 22 Market street, and his store is a good place at which to trade.

When you are in Salem and wish a nice steak or chop, or oysters in their season, call at the Washington lunch room under the Post Office.

Selected Story.

Reuben.

It was a legacy from the father who had died before Reuben was ten years old and left him to the care of Uncle Josiah, the brother of Reuben's long dead mother. The strongest memory Reuben retained of his father was a mind picture of a white haired man sitting up in bed, with the beloved violin in his hands, filling the poor attic room with sweet sounds. He was partially paralyzed even then, and later, when his fingers became helpless his heart broke and he died.

Then Uncle Josiah came from the country to the great city, and took the lad home. At the bottom of the hair trunk containing all Reuben's possessions were safely stored the violin and case with a score of music the dead physician had left his boy.

On the farm in Jersey Reuben found a rough, kindly welcome. Aunt Polly cried a little over the orphan; Sue and Jenny, kindly maidens, kissed and caressed him, and Daisy, whose blue eyes were like twin violets, stole shyly up to the dark haired lad and slipped a slice of cake into his hand. It was a busy hive, the old farm house, where no drones found place.

Uncle Josiah disapproved altogether of the violin. Never had he heard of a fiddler ploughing a field or raising stock. Never had he seen any practical good come from scraping a catgut, and more than once instant destruction was threatened to Reuben's one pleasure. He grew afraid to raise the sweet sounds he loved inside the farm house and would steal away to practice the lesson his father had taught him, by the brookside, in the whispering woods or the shady lanes.

Nobody loved his violin but Daisy. Daisy would softly touch the string, and listen with parted lips and shifting color when Reuben woke the spirits of music with his bow. Sue and Jennie did not object to a good, lively dance tune; but only Daisy would follow Reuben into the world where dreams floated into the sweet melodies, and bow and string talked in music's own language. Daisy alone knew of the lonely walks with the dear companion; and Daisy's lips would quiver and her blue eyes fill when the boy whispered in her ear of his heart hunger.

Years passed by and the boy became a man.

Scarcely worth his salt, Uncle Josiah pronounced him, and yet loved him well, for his gentle obedience, his willingness to perform any task, however distasteful.

A dreamy gawk, in everybody's way, Sue and Jennie said, but saved the choicest bit of country fare for Reuben.

A poor weakly body, Aunt Polly said, and her touch was soft on Reuben's hair, while she sighed gently. The pale thin cheeks would never grow round or rosy, she thought pityingly.

Only Daisy understood the sensitive nature, the tender heart, the starving, longing intellect. Only Daisy grieved when the long delicate hands blistered and bled over rough work, and would never harden. Only Daisy, as maidenhood came, shrined Reuben in her heart of hearts, and knew no other could ever take his place.

Only Daisy filled Reuben's heart! Of all the rough life before him there was only one gentle influence to keep his heart from breaking. The fair, blue eyed girl, with hair like floss silk, alone understood him when he talked of the books he borrowed of the minister, and eagerly perused. Daisy alone kept him from the utter despair of heart loneliness.

So these young hearts, in eleven long years, learned the story of mutual dependence, sympathy, tenderness and devotion, which we call love.

On the day that Reuben was 21, he told Uncle Josiah he loved Daisy, and Uncle Josiah sadly shook his head.

You'll never be able to keep a wife, Reuben, he said. Never! I love Daisy too well to trust her to you. Why, look at it, lad; you've never earned a full day's wages since you came to the farm. It you'd give up your foolish fiddling

MUSICAL NOTES.

The public exhibition of the School children of this town will be given in the Town Hall to-morrow afternoon. Scholars from the Center, Wallis and Bowditch schools will take part, and as rehearsals have been going on for several weeks it is to be expected that a creditable exhibition will be given. The music which is to be sung is of a higher character than has been rendered by the scholars publicly in town, and will show the good work which has been done since the introduction of the study of music into our schools. At the exhibition given by Prof. Bill shortly after he was elected teacher of music here, the results of progress were apparent; but now that he has had an opportunity to familiarize the scholars and teachers with his system and methods, there should be a showing which cannot fail to be of interest to those who are interested in the study of music in our public schools. An interesting event will be an exhibition of the ability of the scholars to read at sight. Several pieces will be distributed to them on the stage—pieces which they have never seen before, and they will be expected to sing them, after taking their pitch, without the instrument. It will be a test of value, if done squarely and without collusion, and from a musical standpoint will be worth more than all the rest of the concert. The programme has been arranged so as to show the progress of the scholars in different directions. There will be a "Morning Song" by the Center School, a Solfeggio by the Wallis, and "The Bells," by the Bowditch. Several Three Part Songs will be sung among them "Gaily our boat glides o'er the Sea," "The Butterfly Hunt" from the French of Minard, "Lightly My Bark," etc. There will be an exercise in the time language and sight singing by the 7th class in the Wallis school, and sight singing from printed forms by all the scholars. The full chorus will sing "Wandering Song," "Battle Song," "Dancing Song in May," "Come, seek the Bower," "Wondrous King of Heaven," "Arise, Arise" and "Shades of Evening." The exercises will close with "Bunker Hill," "America" and "Old Hundred." The concert will begin at 2.30. The scholars will all be on the stage, seated on elevated seats, and the entire seating capacity of the Town Hall will be at the disposal of the public. The admission will be by tickets, which can be obtained of the scholars who are to participate, the teachers in our schools, and of the members of the School Board.

A correspondent from South Peabody sends the following to the editor of this column, regarding the exclusion of the pupils of that school from the musical exhibition to-morrow in the Town Hall. We think the criticism is just. There are in the South Peabody school, and in the other outlying districts, good singers who would have done credit to themselves and to the schools of which they are members.

"Some of the people in this section of the town think it "peculiar," to say the least, that none of the children in the school here are to have a part in the musical exhibition at the Town Hall on the 17th inst. This oversight, or neglect, or indifference, call it what you will, cannot be due to a lack of musical taste or expression on the part of our pupils. Most of them have an "ear for music," and many of them sing like birds. If they have not had sufficient musical culture then why would it not have been a wise plan to stimulate them in the study of music by giving them the benefit of this exhibition with its necessary training, and with the interest quickened by such an occasion?

We learn that the other out-lying schools in this town are no better off in this respect than the schools here. If in other respects they are like these schools, then their musical training for the past few weeks has been neglected, because of this extra work that has been imposed, we suppose. Now we do not want to be over-sensitive in this matter; but we do believe that all our schools should be treated alike—that what in general is good for the one is good for the other, and what is bad for the one is bad for the other. We believe most heartily and thoroughly in the systematic teaching of music in our schools. We indorse all that has been said in commendation of this work in your columns and in the Report of the School Committee.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the thorough teaching of the principals of music in public schools. 'Tis not worth while to waste argument with one who cannot feel and appreciate the worth of such training. Their denials call up Shakepeare's familiar line, "The man that hath not music in himself etc."

We so believe in music for our children that we want them to have the very best drill in this refining and elevating study, that our School Committee can give them. We don't want the scholars here to be treated any better than the scholars of the other schools, but we do expect and demand that they shall have "as good as the best." We are sorry that none of them are to have the inspiration and help which come from the personal preparation for such a public exercise as that of Thursday next."

W. J. Lefavour will furnish the piano for the musical exhibition of the schools to-morrow, and also for the graduating exercises of the High Schools in Salem and Beverly.

Next Sunday being Trinity Sunday, the choir of St John's church, under the direction of Charles A. Clark, will render Alois F. Lejeal's Vespers at the service at 3 P. M. Miss Alice Ducey of the choir, will render a soprano solo, and Mrs. E. R. Bigelow of the choir of the First Church in Salem, will sing the Lesson for the Day. The following programme will be rendered.

Organ. Andante	Gegoat
Postludium	Whitney

Miss Lillie W. Perry, of Danvers, sang soprano again in the Baptist choir last Sunday.

Benjamin M. Kenney, of Salem, has been singing tenor for the past two Sundays at the South Church.

The pupils of Clinton Bessom of Marblehead gave a piano recital last evening in the North chapel in that place. E. S. Magregor, of Salem, assisted.

The concert last Friday evening by Mr. W. J. Lefavour's pupils, of Salem, went off finely. Those who took part were Misses Dunnels, Bray, Brooks, Staples, Smith, Black, Roberts, the Lefavour sisters and Mr. J. L. Burnham and Arthur Roberts. The concert was a great success; this is the third one and each seems to improve over the other. The violin solo by Clara Lefavour was wonderful; she is only nine years old and plays like a professor. The piano solo by Miss Dunnells was finely executed as also the one by Arthur Roberts.

F. C. Record, of Salem, gave a violin solo at a concert by Miss Young in Lewiston, Me., last week. His playing was enthusiastically received.

It is said that the Oxford Male Quartette will disband at the close of the present season, and Mr. Avon D. Saxon will confine himself to concert and oratorio work.

The Salem Cadet Band were again highly commended for their excellent playing at the Annual Parade of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery in Boston last week. This is their second engagement by the Ancients.

The Centennial of the old Stoughton Musical Society was fittingly observed last Wednesday.

Mrs. Edna A. Hall, the vocal teacher of Boston, will spend her vacation in Europe, sailing on the Cunard line June 24th. Her daughter, Miss Marguerite Hall, is having splendid success in society concerts in London.

It is not generally known that a recent attempt was made to revive the concerts of the Boston Philharmoni Society. While it was more than partially successful, it has yet been thought advisable to abandon the enterprise in order to further the interests of a concert scheme that will have as one of its principal objects the popularization of chamber music in this vicinity. Eminent soloists, it is said, will appear in this series of concerts, and other important attractions well calculated to interest the better portion of the musical public in the scheme will doubtless be added.—Boston Home Journal.

A CENTURY of progress has not produced a remedy equal to Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Hay Fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff but is perfectly safe and easily applied with the finger. It gives immediate relief and cures the worst cases. Price 50 cents.

I was troubled with catarrh for seven years previous to commencing the use of Ely's Cream Balm, some five months ago. It has done for me what other so-called cures failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Balm seemed like magic. Clarence L. Huff, Biddeford, Me.

No songs are more popular with old and young, with sisters, cousins and sweet hearts, as well as College students, than those contained in Ditson's famous College Song Books. The latest of these and by far the largest and most attractive collection ever published at fifty cents, is their remarkably popular book entitled College Songs. It has appeared in a revised edition, just in time to contribute its 'jollity jingle and go' to the pleasures of vacation time.

The manager of the Fort Wayne, Ind., Gazette, Mr. B. M. Holman, says he has often read of the wonderful cures effected by St. Jacobs Oil. Recently he sprained his ankle, and invested in a cane and a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil. The latter proved the better investment, as it entirely cured his ankle.

"I have no appetite," complain many sufferers. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives an appetite and enables the stomach to perform its duty.

I want my Ulcerated Household, said a little girl at the post office the other day, and it was some time before the clerk decided that it was her Illustrated Household newspaper that she wanted.

Dyspepsia in its worst forms will yield to the use of Carter's Little Nerve Pills aided by Carter's Little Liver Pills. They not only relieve present distress but strengthen the stomach and digestive apparatus.

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. WOOD, Bloomington, Ill.

For Twenty Years

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. BALCOM, Shirley, Mass.

"I suffered from what the doctors called muscular rheumatism. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured." J. V. A. PROUDFOOT, letter carrier, Chicago, Ill.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

Owing to a break in our press, our paper is a few hours late this week The break occurred about four o'clock, and we were obliged to telephone to Boston for a machinist to repair it.

THOSE OF our readers who listened to the able words of Rev. Henry E. Mott, Memorial Day, may be interested to know that a council of eminent divines in the Congregational church was called last week in his church at Newburyport, to consider his standing as a minister of the Gospel. After considerable discussion the council found that "he ought to be recognized as in good standing in all our churches as a minister of Christ," a result which we suppose will gratify the church over which he is pastor as well as himself.

We are not sure that the reverend gentleman should not be congratulated at having a council called over him. It is not every minister of the Gospel who has ability enough and brains enough to warrant the calling of such a body. The pastor who adheres closely to the old time dogmas of his fathers, who never puts the old truths in a new setting or keeps pace with the progress of the age in religious ideas, will never, we are sure, disturb the councils of the elders, or make any enemies; and while it is not the office or work of a minister to make enemies, it should not be required of him to withold new truth, or the results of progress in religious education from his people, for fear of giving offence to fossils, found in every church, who are not possessed of enough brains or religion to follow him into the truth. A man in the pulpit who towers head and shoulders above his compeers is very often accused of proclaiming heresy. Jealousy is not altogether confined to the pews. The man, whether in the pulpit or out of it, who makes no enemies, stirs up no discussion, but who is so smooth of tongue and speech as to have every one his friend, is by no means the safest to follow, whether in the pulpit or the pew.

Rev. Mr. Mott has been preaching in the pulpits of both Congregational churches in Newburyport. We do not learn that he is unacceptable to the people over which he is now the pastor. But because of a sermon preached in Augusta, Maine, where he was pastor years ago, on the doctrine of eternal punishment, causing such dissatisfaction there that he resigned, and did not obtain the usual letter commending him to other churches,—because of this, he was refused the fellowship of the churches in his conference.

It ought to be well enough understood that there is anything but agreement on this doctrine as proclaimed by the fathers, among the pastors or people of the Congregational faith. When it comes to this, that a pastor called by a church in one place is refused ordination, while in another place a preacher holding the same views is ordained—outside observers cannot be expected to look on and say: "See how these brethren dwell together in unity." When the Council of 1880 sets forth a confession of faith which many prominent Universalists say is good enough Universalism for them, it is evident that the lines of doctrinal belief should not be too sharply drawn.

Rev. Mr. Mott in his address here showed that he is possessed of enough independence and vigor of thought to proclaim the truth as he sees it, and not cover up any part of it for fear of giving offense to the eclesiastical elders. This is the head and front of his offending. We are not surprised, then, that when a body of able men, headed by Rev. Dr. Duryea, of Boston, came to look over the matter, they should see beyond the evident jealousy of a local conference and close the report by "devoutly wishing the blessing of God upon this church, this minister, and all the churches amid which they dwell and which they love."

THERE IS a movement in favor of the issuing of licenses to apothecaries for the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes by the State itself, removing the druggists from the influence of local option in the towns and cities of the State. The movement is to be commended. Druggists, in general, are not rumsellers. There are of course black sheep in every flock, as no one will be more ready to admit than the apothecaries themselves, and occasionally one will be found who will use his license in pharmacy for the illegal traffic in intoxicants. But the proprietors of our drug stores are as honorable a class of citizens as the physician himself. Many of them are physicians, and illegal sales of intoxicants in drug stores need not be frequent, if at all, if the local authorities do their duty.

There are those among the temperance people who do not believe in the use of liquor even as a medicine. These people would have no licenses granted to a druggist. While we respect them in the honest expression of their opinion, we cannot agree with them. Nine out of every ten physicians in practice to-day wish at some time to order intoxicants or light wines as a medicine. Why should not the patient be allowed to obtain it, in such a case? While there may be persons who would perjure themselves to obtain liquor from a druggist, it is folly to presume that every one who purchases it of a druggist for medicine wants it to satisfy his appetite for drink. And it is not always wise to allow local authorities to signify which druggist the people shall patronize. The investigation of the sales by apothecaries in Boston has shown that there is not a general intention to violate the law regarding the sales made. Whatever technical violations there were, could be laid, almost entirely, to laxity on the part of local authorities.

The apothecaries object to being classed with soloon keepers, and we don't blame them. As we have before stated in these columns, the fact that the law specially excludes druggists from the prohibitive provisions of a "no" vote, and places the fee for a sixth class license at a nominal rate, shows the intent of the original framers of the law. A sale of liquors for medicinal purposes, under this license, and on the prescription of a physician, is as legitimate a business as the sale of a quinine pill or a porous plaster, and is likely, in many cases, to be of as much medicinal value to the purchaser. There is another point made in license cities and towns, against the druggists, which would be wisely obviated by placing the matter in the hands of the State. This is the refusal of the local authorities to grant a sixth class license, and compelling the druggists to take out a license of the fourth class. This is done in Salem. It is done in New Bedford. It is done elsewhere. It makes a rumseller of a druggist, whether he will or not. Under this license he can sell any kind of liquor for any purpose, NOT TO BE DRUNK ON THE PREMISES. He is not confined to its sale for medicinal purposes, which is all the majority of honorable druggist desire, but he is compelled to sell for this purpose under a license allowing him to sell for any purpose. It would be much wiser for the State to allow all druggists to sell under such restrictions as the law now provides, and put upon the local authorities the sole responsibility of seeing that the law regarding such sales is strictly carried out. Such a law would be wise, and we shall be glad to see it on our Statute books.

THE BEVERLY Times says of this town "Where is your Law and Order League? It seems to have done nothing since Rev. Mr. Sperry left town. Worse than in the palmy days of 'Billy' Hayes."

If this were true, it would be a source of regret. But it is not true. The Law and Order League is just as active as it was when Rev. Mr. Sperry was pastor of the South Church. There has not been so much noise about shutting up saloons, for the simple reason that there are no saloons to close up. Where once there were a dozen saloons on Foster street, from Billy Hayes' place to the Post Office, there is now not a solitary place. They are closed, and at night the street is as quiet and dark as the remotest street in town. Hayes is in Charlestown State prison, Millea is serving a six months' sentence. The others have gone out of the rum business.

Because there is drunkenness in town, because there was a murder and other crimes Memorial Day week, it does not follow that the Law and Order League are inactive. It shows that liquor is still to be obtained—and possibly in Peabody. But the most of it is obtained in Salem or Boston. As long as the city of Salem licenses one hundred saloons, we must expect that liquor will be obtained and drank. We must expect it anyway.

But the Law and Order League can close up the saloons; it can remove from our young men the temptations which an open bar, in sight of their every day work, exposes them to. They can make it an impossibility for a stranger to obtain a glass of liquor in town. They can make it so much of an impossibility for others, that what little is sold can be obtained only in private houses, where the stock is kept in a small bottle in the pocket, and the duplicates in a neighbor's house. And all this they have done. It is easy to slur the work of the League. Such kind of talk is very common. But it is not easy to contravert the facts we have mentioned, or to blot out the assertion that there is not a liquor saloon doing business in Peabody.

THE BOSTON Home Journal, in speaking of the well known antagonism, on the part of the Springfield Republican, towards Lieut. Gov. Ames, calls the latter sheet "a journal of some repute in rural communities," and its editor "a country editor." Shades of Sam. Bowles! What will Springfield do after this? It was enough to have its attempt at being made a port of entry ignored by President Cleveland, but to have its leading paper, founded by the illustrious Bowles, called a "journal of home repute in rural communities" is too much. It wont be safe for the editor of the Home Journal, we fancy, to be seen in Springfield.

LAST SUNDAY was not an auspicious day for opening at the beaches on our coast, yet preparations had been made for the first concert by the Salem Cadet Band at the Willows, and the first by the Boston Cadet Band at the Point of Pines. The season at the beaches and seaside resorts is upon us. And from this time till fall the horse railroad and steam trains will do their best to accommodate the public along their lines. Every house and pavilion at the Point of Pines is open, and the same is true of the Willows. The clam and fish dinner is in its glory. Who would deprive us of these festive pleasures along our coast?

AN ACT to provide for precinct voting in towns has passed the Legislature and was approved by Gov. Robinson June 2d. It gives authority and directions to the Selectmen, Assessors, registrars of voters, town clerk and other officers in towns "which shall accept the provisions of this act." The first thing for Peabody, therefore, if her citizens desire to have the voting done by precincts, is to accept the provisions of the act. This can be done at a special meeting, and such special meeting can be called on petition of the required number of voters. Would it not be a good idea to have such a meeting called?

THE BEVERLY Times thinks it would be better for papers who are running an adv., headed "Of Interest to Ladies," to fill the space with a spring poem. The Times is right. Yet there are lots of papers hereabouts running it. We wonder if any of them have received the cash which is to be "sent after the first insertion." Maybe they are running it as news to the public.

THE PUBLIC statutes say regarding the filling of vacancies in town offices, that the Selectmen may sign a warrant calling for a special town meeting to fill such vacancies provided they have not been previously filled by the selectmen. This would seem to intimate that the vacancy on their own Board must be filled in one way or the other. What are they going to do about it?

THE SALEM Telegram intimates that it is in possession of information regarding the seventh congressional district which will cause considerable fluttering when it is known. Speak out, brother Nevins. Don't keep us in such suspense.

D. B. H. Power & Co., the house furnishing men of Marblehead and Salem, have issued a very attractive illustrated catalogue containing a description of their many goods to be found at the stores. It is a handsome piece of work, and a credit to the firm and to the Marblehead Messenger office where it was printed. If you intend to furnish or refurnish a house call on them.

The Fall River line have resumed their musical entertainments on their steamers, which in seasons past have proved attractive features. The elegant steamers Pilgrim and Bristol run every night, Sundays included. The line is deservedly popular with the travelling public.

An exchange says: For some time past gold dollars have been growing scarce until now it is difficult to find one. The reason for this is that they have been called in by the Government. Gold dollars now command a premium of twenty-five cents.

Where Hours go Merrily.

The strawberry festival at the Methodist church, last Thursday night, was liberally patronized by the members of the society and their friends, and a neat sum was added to their treasury.

The Salem Baptist Association, which includes the Baptist churches in this vicinity, have arranged for a union picnic to be held at Centennial Grove, Essex, Wednesday, July 7. As there will be twenty-five Sunday schools represented a large attendance is expected. It is the first time a union picnic on a general scale has been attempted by that organization, but there is every reason to believe it will be so successful that it may become a permanent feature annually or once in two or more years.

The Methodist people will picnic at Asbury Grove to-morrow. Reduced fare on the railroads and short speeches with instrumental and vocal music will draw a large crowd.

The Peabody's were defeated in their first game by the Beverlys, on Beverly Common, Saturday afternoon, by a score of 16 to 11. Frame, M. McCarthy, Sheehan, Greenhalgh and Leighton played a good game for the Peabodys. The Beverlys batted hard and fielded well. The score:—

The Knights of Labor of this town are perfecting arrangements for a grand union picnic at Canobie Lake, N. H., a beautiful resort on the line of the Lowell & Manchester road. It is proposed to hold the picnic July 21, 1886.

The St Johns C. T. A. Society are arranging for their annual picnic to be held on the Fourth of July at Oak Island. An interesting programme will be arranged.

The social circle of the South church will hold a strawberry festival this evening.

Miss Georgie, daughter of Mr. Daniel Goodrich, celebrated her birthday with a party, at her home one evening last week. A number of her schoolmates were present.

Under the auspices of Post 34, G. A. R., there will be an excursion to Provincetown from Salem next Friday in the steamer Empire State. Tickets at $1.00 can be obtained of George Stevens, and it is distinctly stated that no liquors will be sold on the boat.

A very pleasant event took place at St. John's Catholic church last evening. Rev. Patrick Masterson, the assistant pastor, was presented with an elegant gold headed cane by the teachers of the Sunday school. The presentation was made by Daniel O'Connor and the Rev. gentleman feelingly responded. On the head of the cane was the following engraving: "Rev. Patrick Masterson. Presented by St. Johns Sunday School teachers, June 15, '86."

Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. worked the third degree on one candidate last evening.

The lawn party at the residence of Mr. Wm. H. Little was postponed from yesterday till to-day on account of the weather.

The Steamer Empire State will arrive at Battery wharf this week, and Saturday the trip is from Boston to Salem, where the passengers can land for five hours. Sunday the steamer runs to Provincetown. These will be the only trips previous to the departure for Providence, Fall River, and Baltimore.

Dr. Samuel K. Lothrop, a prominent Unitarian clergyman, died at his residence in Boston last Sunday. Dr. Lothrop was a graduate of Harvard, and was first called to the Unitarian Church in Dover, N. H., in 1829, when that church was first formed. In 1834 he was called to the old Brattle street church, where he remained till the church was torn down and to the time of his death. He was a conservative and old school Unitarian. During the pastorate of Rev. J. O. Knowles in this town he delivered in that church a very able lecture on Charles Wesley.

Those who received a little book offering a prize by the Packer Manufacturing Company, of New York, for the best set of free hand drawings, would perhaps like to know who won the prizes. The first, $10, was won by Albert M. Allen, 14 years of age, a member of the Springfield high school, and the second was taken by Agnes Gray of Lynn.

The volunteer associations for observing thunder storms in New England, instituted by the New England meteorological society in co-operation with the United States signal service, will again continue their observations through the three summer months, beginning with June 1. Over 300 observers are already enlisted, and additional volunteers are still reporting their names at the rate of 10 or 20 a day. Persons who are desirous of assisting in the investigations should address the Boston signal office, through which correspondence will be carried on, writing "thunder storms" on one corner of their envelope.

In Boston every Republican sheet but one is edited by a Democrat, every Democrat sheet by a Republican, every free trade organ by a protectionist, and most of the tariff papers by free traders. And the worst of it is that the whole gang spend much of their time lecturing other people on their insincerity, venality and dishonesty.—Manchester (N. H.) Mirror.

The Essex Club held its annual meeting last Saturday at Young's and reelected the old board of officers, as follows: President, Hon. E. H. Haskell of Gloucester; vice president, W. H. Moody of Haverhill; and secretary and treasurer, Ben Pitman of Marblehead.

Wednesday Evening, June 16, 1886,

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Children's Day seems to have become an established institution of the churches. At the South Church Mr. Hall, the pastor, preached a sermon to the children from the text: "I am the way, the truth and the life." About seventy-five of the younger members of the school assembled in the vestry, and at the hour for service marched up into the church, singing as they went. They occupied the front pews and listened very attentively to the words of wisdom which presented to them Jesus as the children's friend, the guide, the light and the life, in the journey through the world. The display of flowers was very pretty and appropriate. On one side of the pulpit upon the platform, resting upon an easel, was a shield bearing the verse: "Suffer little children to come unto me," the letters being formed of white daisies upon a background of dark moss, the whole trimmed with ferns. During the afternoon the flowers were removed to the vestry in preparation for the Sunday School concert which was held in the evening. At half past six the children and a vestry full of their friends assembled to listen to the service which was in reality, as well as in name, a children's service, being almost entirely by the members of the primary department. Under the direction of Miss Floyd the little ones performed their parts very creditably, all showing careful training and many quite marked ability in speaking. During the evening a reading and a song by Miss Lina McPherson added very much to the interest of the occasion. Not the least interesting part to the children was the distribution among them of the flowers which had added so much to their pleasure through the day and evening.

The Legislative Committee on the Enos Electric Railway returned from Greenville, Friday morning, and reported in favor of the granting of the petition for leave to build a road to Winthrop, and it passed its first reading. The committee were much pleased with the successful operation of the road and there seems to be little doubt but that the legislature will grant the desired petition. On motion of Mr. Burns of Ayer, the house substituted for the report of the committee on street railways, leave to withdraw on the petition of John A. Enos and others for authority to build an elevated railway in the town of Winthrop, a bill incorporating the Winthrop Electric Street Railway company. The proposed incorporators are Erastus H. Doolittle, John A. Enos, P. S. Macgowan, C. A. Erving, Walter Lawton, S. A. Freeman and Thomas N. Dwyer; the line is to extend from a point at or near Winthrop Junction to Point Shirley; the structure is to be elevated and the line is to be operated by electricity; the capital stock is not to be less than $30,000 for each mile, 10 per cent. to be paid before the certificate of incorporation is issued, and the other features of the bill are the same as those in the act incorporating the Meigs Elevated Railway company.

By the new time table of the Boston & Lowell R. R., which is to go into effect June 28, the people of this town and Salem are to have special accommodations to the mountains. The express of last year was well patronized and made close connections, but this year Mr. Tuttle has arranged still better accommodations, by which people can go directly north on day or night trains. The first train will leave Salem at 7.50 A. M. This will connect at Lowell with the train leaving Boston at 8.30. The next one will be the express of last year leaving Salem at 9.10, and connecting directly with the White Mountain express, for all points. A train will also leave Salem at 12.40, connecting with the White Mountains and Montreal express, leaving Boston at 1 P. M. By this train our citizens can get their dinner and reach Jefferson or Fabyans or Bethlehem the same night. Finally, there will be a train leaving Salem at 5.50 connecting with the Montreal express leaving Boston at 7 P. M. Returning there will be trains leaving Lowell at 4.15, 5.34 and 7.35 P. M. for the benefit of the travel from the Mountains. There will now be no necessity for going to Boston to connect with Montreal or any northern points.

During a recent visit to Rutland, Vermont, we made a call on Mr. W. H. Hildreth, and found him and his estimable wife very pleasantly situated. Mr. Hildreth is receiving clerk for the Producers Marble Company, a syndicate of five large owners who largely control the market in their special grades.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Porter, a sister of the late W. M. Jacobs, died at her home in Malden last Sunday at the age of 76 years and 6 months. Her funeral took place from this town to-day.

Excelsior Steamer No. 2 of the Peabody Fire Department, having refitted and painted their new room in the brick house, gave a supper last evening to the other members of the Department and invited guests. The supper was served in the basement of the Central station at 9 o'clock. The invited guests included D. S. Littlefield, Daniel B. Lord, Chas. G. Folsom, S. S. Littlefield, Geo. F. Ward and others, with representatives of the press. A supper of clam chowder and fixins—the fixins including lobster salad, rolls, fruit, cake, ice cream and coffee—was served in an elegant manner by Henry G. Robbins of the Central Fish Market, a member of Steamer 2. This, we understand, is Mr. Robbins' first experience in the catering line, but if the supper served last night is any indication of what he can do, it will not be the last time his services will be in demand. The supper was good, well served and in abundance, and the boys were not slow in finding it out. After all had been satisfied, and the cigars passed, Foreman John F. Morland called the company to order and in fitting language welcomed all to the hospitality of the company. He said that this was Steamer 2's first attempt in this line, and it was his first attempt as presiding officer to welcome the firemen to the festive board. As guests of other companies, he had often been called upon, as representative of Steamer 2, to make long and eloquent speeches, but this occasion was embarassing to him. However, although this company had never had the occasion before to give a supper, once must be the first time. They had re-furnished their room, had it painted by Mr. Ward, and made up their mind that they could not fittingly enjoy it unless it was "wet down." He then called upon representative firemen present, and speeches were made by Chief Engineer Samuel H. Buxton, Assistant Engineers Johnson and Reed, past members of the Fire Department Littlefield, Lord, Folsom and others, and the foremen of the different companies. At the close of the repast the guests took the occasion to visit the new room of the company where they were made at home by the members. The company broke up at a seasonable hour, wishing the new company every success in the future.

Mr. Timothy A. O'Leary, a well known resident of Fulton street, died at his home quite suddenly last Sunday morning. He was at work at the shop of John A. Lord Jr., where he has been employed for the past 20 years up to last Thursday night. He had a sore throat, which ended with a spasm of the glottis which caused instant death. Mr. O'Leary was a man of liberal views, and well educated, and at the time of the Land League movement in this town, he was one of the best speakers. He was in the U. S. Navy during the war and was a member of Union Post 50 G. A. R. His funeral took place from St. Johns Church yesterday and a delegation of the Grand Army, and a large number of friends followed the remains to the grave.

Children's Sunday was observed at the Methodist church last Sunday. In the afternoon the pastor, Rev. G. A. Phinney, preached an appropriate sermon to the children and was very attentively listened to. In the evening was a Sunday school concert, consisting of singing by the school and choir, appropriate recitations, etc., including remarks by the pastor and superintendent. The church was handsomely decorated, the railing in front of the organ being tastily trimmed, and on either side was a step ladder covered with ferns and flowers. In front of the pulpit was a large crown of field daisies, and on either side baskets of ferns and flowers.

A young man named Miller from Lynn was about town Thursday with a new pattern bicycle. The general plan of it seems to be similar to that of the Star but with the little wheel in the rear. That wheel is still retained as the steering wheel, the movement of the handle bar being perpendicular rather than horizontal. It has a long lever movement instead of a crank movement, and one of a peculiar pattern. New anti-friction bearings have been invented and a number of minor differences are noticeable. The machines are not yet on the market but will be manufactured in the western part of the state.

Letters of administration were granted Monday, in the Probate Court, on the estate of Ellen Crowley of this town. This is the woman who was murdered on Memorial Day. An inventory was filed of the estate of the late Joseph W. Reed, in trust for Joseph F. Reed, in the amount of $7000.

To-day is the anniversary of the separation of Danvers (now Peabody) from Salem. The event was celebrated Wednesday June 16, 1852, or 34 years ago to-day. On that occasion the school children all turned out, and a very interesting occasion was apprropriately celebrated.

M. P. Beckett, Esq., of Attleboro, is in town.

The Peabody Cycle club was organized last night with headquarters over Heath Bros.' stove store, and numbers eleven riders. The following officers were elected: President, J. F. Heath; Secretary, M. P. Ward; Treasurer, Geo. A. Whitney; Capt., W. J. Lloyd; Lieut., Geo. A. Whitney.

Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. have received an invitation to participate in the parade of the Odd Fellows in Boston next September, on the occasion of the visit of the Grand Lodge. Mr. James Buxton was appointed a committee of one to take the matter under consideration, and report at a future meeting.

Miss Belle Bill, daughter of Prof. Bill, who was to play the organ at the musical festival to-morrow, met with an accident Tuesday, by which her hand was badly burned with steam across the knuckles. A physician dressed the wound. Mrs. J. C. Foote was engaged to take her place.

BARGAINS EVERY DAY.

Wednesday, June 16,

BENEFIT DAY,

AND CONTINUATION OF VAST BARGAIN SALE.

To-day, Wednesday, we will once more inaugurate one of our traditional Benefit Days. The cutting down of every article in our place we don't promise. Reason would be against that. Watching New York, Boston and Salem—more especially Salem—dry goods houses, as sharply as hawks watch hens, has already ground prices down; has brought the prices of heaps of things down to the very verge that divides profit from cost. To cut them further we couldn't; nobody could.

To print all the Bargains here is out of the question. Too comprehensive for anything like that.

At best we can give but a few example prices. They'll reflect the real not mentioned. To head for any of the thirty-two departments—hit or miss, you are bound to get any number of bargains.

Be quick in response if you are in earnest.

PRICES HALVED,

TRIMMED AND UNTRIMMED BONNETS AND HATS.

Though almost too big an offer to combine with any other sale, we've determinated to do so in order to swell this big general sale now going on to the highest notch ever reached in a Bargain Sale. Everything in the entire stock of Trimmed Millinery to close out at exactly half early season's prices. They range from $5.00 to $20.00. They'll be marked from $2.50 to $10.00. So those who have not yet secured their Hats and Bonnets, this extraordinary offer so early in the season will have peculiar force.

Postscript.—We make an exception in our Crape and Mourning Bonnets. They will not be reduced.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Should be kept constantly at hand, for use in emergencies of the household. Many a mother, startled in the night by the ominous sounds of Croup, finds the little sufferer, with red and swollen face, gasping for air. In such cases Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is invaluable. Mrs. Emma Gedney, 159 West 128 st., New York, writes: "While in the country, last winter, my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with Croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was tried in small and frequent doses, and, in less than half an hour, the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Pectoral saved my darling's life." Mrs. Chas. B. Landon, Guilford, Conn., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Saved My Life,

and also the life of my little son. As he is troubled with Croup, I dare not be without this remedy in the house." Mrs. J. Gregg, Lowell, Mass., writes: "My children have repeatedly taken Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for Coughs and Croup. It gives immediate relief, followed by cure." Mrs. Mary E. Evans, Scranton, Pa., writes: "I have two little boys, both of whom have been, from infancy, subject to violent attacks of Croup. About six months ago we began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it acts like a charm. In a few minutes after the child takes it, he breathes easily and rests well. Every mother ought to know what a blessing I have found in Ayer's Cherry Pectoral." Mrs. Wm. C. Reid, Freehold, N. J., writes: "In our family, Ayer's medicines have been blessings for many years. In cases of Colds and Coughs, we take

and the inconvenience is soon forgotten."

now you might make something of yourself, but as long as your heart is in that sawing and scraping you'll be good for naught else. It's my advice to you to smash the fiddle over the first rock, and then I'll talk to you about Daisy.

Break his violin! Destroy his dearest friend, his sole comfort! But for Daisy? What would he not do for Daisy?

Perhaps Uncle Josiah was right. Perhaps if he had no outlet for the dreams that filled his soul they would cease to haunt him, and he would conquer the mazy routine of farm drudgery that was such a heart breaking problem to him. Perhaps when all the phantoms that broke into reality upon his violin were driven away, he would be the practical farmer to whom Uncle Josiah would give Daisy.

Musing thus, very sorrowfully, Reuben took his violin from its case and went to the woods, to an opening, the country folks called the fairy ring. Here he sat upon a huge stone and played his farewell, a dirge of hope. Great tears fell over his pale cheeks as the weird, melancholy strain echoed through the space around him. Then he wrapped the violin once, twice in his arms, kissed it tenderly, and lifted it high in the air to smash it on the rock. But his heart failed him. His arm dropped nerveless at his side, and he stood motionless, looking at his father's legacy.

Suddenly there stepped into the opening an elderly man, gray haired and dark eyed, and dressed in city cut attire.

So you would smash your violin? he said. You had better sell it, or, better still, play on it. Was it you I heard playing as I came through the woods?

Yes, I was bidding my violin farewell.

H'm! Play again for me.

Gladly Reuben lifted his violin and drew the bow across it.

I will play the Carnival of the Birds, he said; and there rose upon the air such a twittering chorus, here a saucy trill, there a busy chirp, then a roulade, till the very air seemed alive with songsters, while under all a sweet melody throbbed and melted into softest strains.

This is the Brook's Hymn, Reuben said, and the rippling stream was mocked and echoed in faint, fantastic music.

Who wrote these? the stranger asked.

They were never written. They came from my heart, was the quiet reply. I will play you some written music.

And again the violin obeyed the bow, as the works Reuben had studied from his father's music rose upon the summer air.

And you were about to break your violin? the stranger said.

Yes; for I can never be a farmer while my brain is full of music, was the sad reply.

Ah! You want to be a farmer then? Would you not rather be a musician?

Reuben's eyes glistened. Long he and the stranger talked, and the sun was setting when he turned his face homeward.

Uncle Josiah, he said, when all the chores were done and the farmer rested on the moon-lit porch, if in a year I can bring proof that I can support Daisy, will you give her to me? I will, was the hearty reply. Have you broken your fiddle, Reuben?

No, and I am going to leave you to-morrow. I have been offered work in the city.

Work in the city? Well, lad, it may be you are too peaked for farm work and will find it easier there. But remember, if you fail, there's always a home for you here, Reuben.

Reuben grasped the hand stretched out to him in his long, slender fingers, and his sobbing God bless you sir, came from his very heart.

Not even to Daisy did he tell his new hopes, but bade her be faithful and whether he succeeded or failed he would return at the end of the year.

When he took his place in the stage coach for the railway station, his new friend, met in the fairy ring, was by his side.

Little Daisy kept her heart true Every market day when the farmer.

YOUR HAIR

should be your crowning glory. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the vitality and color of youth to hair that has become thin and faded; and, where the glands are not decayed or absorbed, will cause a new growth on bald heads.

MAY the youthful color and vigor of the hair be preserved to old age? Read the following, from Mrs. G. Norton, Somerville, Mass.: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past 30 years, and, although I am upwards of 60, my hair is as abundant and glossy to-day as when I was 25."

BE assured, that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor will convince you of its powers. Mrs. M. E. Goff, Leadville, Col., writes: "Two years ago, my hair having almost entirely fallen out, I commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. To-day my hair is 29 inches long, fine, strong, and healthy."

RENEWED and strengthened by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair regains its youthful color and vitality. Rev. H. P. Williamson, Davidson College, Mecklenburg Co., N. C., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the last ten years. It is an excellent preservative."

BY the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, Geo. A. Dadman, Waterloo, Mo., had his hair restored to its original healthy condition. He was nearly bald, and very gray. He writes: "Only four bottles of the Vigor were required to restore my hair to its youthful color and quantity."

USING Ayer's Hair Vigor cures diseases of the scalp. F. H. Foster, Princeton, Ind., writes: "I had been troubled for years with a disease of the scalp; my head was covered with dandruff, and the hair dry and harsh. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave me immediate relief, cleansed the scalp, and rendered the hair soft and pliable."

ELDER PUB. CO., Chicago,

came from town with his great wagon empty, he took from his pocket a letter from Reuben for Daisy, and every one was hopeful. His work was pleasant and paying him well. Some of the letters were dated New York, some Boston, some Philadelphia; from all the great cities, even New Orleans, and Daisy's heart throbbed high with loving delight to feel sure his love was true amid the gay scenes he described, the new friends he met.

Winter sped away, spring blossoms bloomed and fell, and the end of the year was drawing near. A letter came to Uncle Josiah:—

Will you bring Daisy to New York, Reuben wrote, and judge for yourself of my prospects.

And Uncle Josiah, after long consultation with Aunt Polly, concluded to go. Daisy had a new dress of soft white muslin made, and bought a dainty straw hat in the village. Then Uncle Josiah wrote to Reuben by what train to expect him and the journey began.

Reuben was not at the depot, but in his place was a courteous gentleman who explained to Uncle Josiah that his nephew was detained by business, took the travellers to hotel where their rooms were engaged, and waited while they had supper. Then telling them he would take them to Reuben, he put them into a carriage and drove rapidly to a white building, whose wide hall was brilliantly illuminated. Here well dressed men and ladies in full evening toilets were entertaining in crowds. Reuben's friend led Uncle Josiah and Daisy to a seat in the brilliant hall near the platform, and told them Reuben would come soon.

In Daisy's hand he put a programme and she wonderingly read of the musical treat in store for her, only vaguely comprehending it all. On every side the buzz of conversation bore the name of the great L——, the famous violinist, whose Cremona seemed gifted with speech under the touch of his inspired fingers.

It was like a dream. A white robed lady came upon the platform and sang, a gentleman played a solo upon the piano. Then there was a great noise of people clapping their hands and stamping their feet, fairly bewildering poor country bred Daisy.

A great hush, and softly, familiar as a mother's voice, there fell upon Daisy's ear the notes of a violin, bearing out upon the air the melody of Reuben's Carnival of the Birds.

She looked up then and met the soft, dark eyes of her lover watching her face as he drew his bow across the strings. Not a sound but the music of the wondrous violin broke the stillness of the vast room, where one man's genius kept the crowd spell bound.

It was over, and the great violinist bowed and was gone. Again the deafening, tumultuous applause, and Reuben was back again, playing an air unfamiliar to Daisy, but seeming to answer all the deep joy of her soul.

Twice Reuben played, recalled each time, and then the concert was over, and their escort led Uncle Josiah back to the carriage, Daisy clinging fast to his arm. At the door of their private parlor the new friend bade them good-night, and opening the door they stood face to face with Reuben. Not the pale, sad boy of a year ago, but a man, self reliant, glad and noble, one who had found his life work and was doing it well.

Uncle Josiah found the strap of his glove almost unmanageable while Reuben clasped Daisy in his arms, and low, tender words fell from the lips of both.

But when Reuben, clasping Daisy still, held out his hand, the farmer grasped it hard.

No doubt I was an old fool, Reuben, he said; but I'm not too old to learn.

And Reuben over the dainty supper that was presently served, told how his violin had won him fame and gold—more than Uncle Josiah had imagined a man could earn in ten years.

I have an offer to go abroad, Uncle, Reuben said, and if I accept it I must sail next month. May I take Daisy?

Yes, lad. You've kept your promise—I'll keep mine.

You are my guests this week, and then I'm free till we sail, so we may go home for the wedding, Reuben said.

A week of sight seeing, shopping, intense happiness, with three of the concerts where Daisy's heart was divided between love and pride, and then away to the farm.

There was a quiet wedding, and Aunt Polly wept over the long separation to come, but the little bride had no misgivings when she turned her face from her old home to cross the wide ocean with her husband. And Reuben, in his greatest triumphs, would ever turn his eyes to where, in some quiet corner, he knew Daisy, too, listened to his violin.

THE LADIES'

DONGOLA!

OFFICE OF ORDWAY & CLARK,

MANUFACTURERS OF

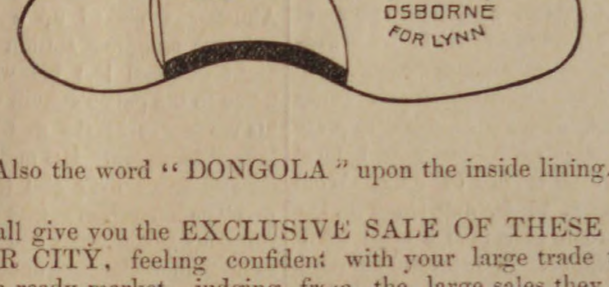
LADIES' FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.

HAVERHILL, MASS., February 25, 1886.

MR. WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

DEAR SIR: We have this day sent you a large invoice of our justly celebrated DONGOLA BOOTS. You will find they are all that has been claimed for them, and far ahead and entirely different from Kangaroo, Glove or Mat Kid. There is no other boot made for Ladies' wear which, for softness of finish, elegance of fit combined with such lasting durability, will give the entire satisfaction of this boot. They are something that has long been needed, as they wear better than French or American Kid, and will not stretch, turn purple, or look rusty. So popular and unprecedented has become the demand for these goods throughout the country, as the merits of the leather have become known, and so limited the importation of skins out of which the goods are manufactured, and so many imitations under similar names have been placed upon the market, that it has been found necessary to copyright the name.

NONE ARE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED WITH OUR AGENTS NAME UPON THE SOLE, THUS:



Also the word "DONGOLA" upon the inside lining.

We shall give you the EXCLUSIVE SALE OF THESE BOOTS IN YOUR CITY, feeling confident with your large trade that they will find a ready market, judging from the large sales they have met with in other cities. Respectfully yours,

ORDWAY & CLARK.

SPARKS.

The Board of Engineers held their regular meeting last Wednesday evening and transacted the following business: William H. Joll was transferred from H. & L. 1, to Steamer No. 1. Frank H. C. Lord and Jesse N Ferren were appointed members of Hose 1 in place of W. T. Gunn and Fred Farrington, resigned. J. S. Tuttle. Allen McDonald and Eugene Tyler were appointed to Hose 2 in place of W. R. Armstrong, W. L Ward and H. O. Farrington, resigned. The alterations at the house of Hose 2, were referred to the Committee on Repairs. The Committee on Fire Alarm were given permission to put the striker on the bell on the Central Station. It was voted to advertise for proposals for coal for the Central Station.

The members of Abel Proctor H. & L., with invited guests, sat down to clam chowder in the company room last Wednesday evening. After supper, speeches were made by Engineers Southwick and Johnson and others, after which some very fine singing was rendered by members of the company.

Last Thursday evening at 8.34 o'clock, an alarm of fire was given from the bell on the house of Hose 2, for a slight fire in the house of Andrew Dodge on Winter street, caused by the tipping over of a kerosene lamp in a sleeping room. The lamp rolled under a bed and set fire to the clothes, but was quickly extinguished by the neighbors. Hose 1 got out of the house in just 33 seconds from the first stroke of the bell, followed by Steamer 2 just ten seconds behind. The H & L was delayed by having a green horse, one of the grays being sick. Not knowing where the alarm started from, the H & L went up Central street as far as Elm, while the Steamer and Hose 1 went down Main and up Washington street. Their services were not required.

The large steam chimney at the tannery of Charles Harrington & Co., on Walnut street, got on fire Saturday evening and an alarm was rung in on Hose 4's bell, but was not taken up by the other bells. Hose 4 went over to the tannery.

At a meeting of Steamer Company No. 1 held last evening, Joseph F. Hart resigned as foreman and withdrew from the department. William H. Joll was elected Foreman and John Perkins Assistant Foreman.

A base ball nine has been formed in the Hook and Ladder company, and now they wish to meet some fireman's nine that wishes to play them a game of ball. Assistant Foreman, F. D. Heylingberg, is captain of the nine.

The Fire Alarm Committee held a meeting last evening but nothing definite was done.

Steamer 1 will be taken out Friday evening to the brook on Endicott street and tested.

Hose 1 was out for drill Monday evening. They made the run from the engine house to Chestnut street connecting with the hydrant at the foot of Franklin street, laid 150 feet of hose and threw a stream of water, the time being taken from the time the horse left his stall until water appeared at the nozzle. This was done in just 1 minute and 30 seconds, the distance run being over one eighth of a mile. After this the Lowery hydrant on the square was tried with four lines of hose. One of the streams threw the pipeman on his back, the stream [illegible] ing the street lantern at the c[illegible] Central and Lowell streets.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Children's Day was observed last Sunday by the South and West Peabody churches. There was a fair attendance notwithstanding the rain. There was manifest a spirit of thankfulness rather than of regret because the refreshing showers were much needed; even though they interfered somewhat with the arrangement that had been made to call out a full attendance.

Both the interior of the Chapel at West Peabody, and the audience room of the church at South Peabody, presented a beautiful appearance. Deft hands had tastefully arranged the profusion of wild and cultivated flowers and ferns, that had been brought to the sanctuary as a loving offering. At West Peabody, on the left of the platform, a floral ladder rested against the wall, the rounds composed of roses, the side pieces of foliage. Opposite stood a table with potted plants, its base banked by maiden-hair ferns. In the corner to the right a table bore a beautiful cross composed of grasses and ox-eyed daisies. The chandelier and lamps were appropriately trimmed, while around the platform were placed baskets of flowers containing bouquets for all, which were distributed among the audience by little girls and boys during the service.

At So. Peabody there was a profusion of flowers skilfully arranged. On the right of the platform stood a table bearing large ferns and daisies in most tasteful combination. Upon the platform beneath the pulpit ferns and locust blossoms were banked; while the pulpit, tables and platform bore bouquets of beautiful cut flowers. As at West Peabody these were distributed among the people in attendance at the evening service. A number of canaries were present, one of which joined most heartily in the service of song. What with flowers, birds, and children, the audience room presented a most inviting appearance. A beautiful exercise, prepared by the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, was used in both churches. The subject was "Jesus the Good Shepard." It consisted of responses, readings, singing and recitations. A Sabbath School praise service at So. Peabody, and a Sunday School concert at West Peabody, closed the services of a most delightful and instructive day.

Rev. George B. Jewett, of Salem, who died last Wednesday in that city, was well known in Peabody, particularly among the Congregationalist people, as he preached many years at the Rockville, chapel, before the settlement of a regular pastor. Dr. Jewett was a graduate of Amherst College, of the class of 1840, and was afterwards a tutor and professor there. But he was especially known of late years, as an inventor of an artificial leg, the invention being occasioned by his own necessity, being obliged on account of an accident to have his leg amputated. There was a large demand for these legs after the war, and Dr. Jewett must have realized something from their sale. Since his accident he has resided in Salem where he was respected by all citizens, preaching occasionally and supplying pulpits when his services were needed.

Mr. William Giles has improved his place the past week by painting.

Mr. Perley Galeucia has been spending a week's vacation in Maine.

The condition of Benj. Wiggin is somewhat improved from last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brown are receiving congratulations. It's a girl and was born last Thursday night.

Work will soon be commenced on "Rum rock bridge," on Lynn street near County street. The bridge will be lowered about two feet and widened in the same proportion. Mr. J. B. Newhall will have charge of the work.

The carpenters have the barn of J. B. Thomas raised and nearly bordered in. It will hold about 100 tons of hay when completed.

Mr. Daniel Galeucia is having a carriage house built for his use in the rear of his house on Lynn street.

Those who wish to get away from the city for a brief time will find no pleasanter way to spend a week than by making a trip to Baltimore via the fine steamers of the Boston, Baltimore and Norfolk Steamship line. The Chatham, D. H. Miller and Berkshire, which run between Boston and Baltimore, via Norfolk, are fine iron ships well appointed and ably officered. They leave Boston Wednesdays and Saturdays at 3 p. m. and excursionists may visit Norfolk, Old Point Comfort and Baltimore, and return by the same steamer. The price of round trip tickets, including state room and meals, is but $22.00.

Mr. William H. Emerson of the firm of N. W. Edson & Co., will be married this evening to Miss Kate E. Houghton of Springfield, at the residence of the bride's father. They will reside in Peabody.

If you are tired taking the large old-fashioned griping pills, try Carter's Little Liver Pills and take some comfort. A man can't stand everything. One pill a dose.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

While lifting a heavy trunk, Mr. Horace A. Wilson, the expressman, sustained a severe strain which kept him from his work several days last week.

A Peabody man visited a city not far from here one day last week, and as night approached he pulled off his boots and laid himself down beside the road to meditate on the past forty years of his life and how much of that time he had spent in guzzling rum and abusing his family. His meditations not being of a sufficiently cheerful nature to keep him awake, he fell asleep and was picked up by the officers who perambulated that beat and they handled him so gently that he did not awake till his case was called the next morning before a Judge in the police court, and he was obliged to draw his calf skin for the usual fine. Will the lesson be lost?

Mr. Joseph H. Poor lost a horse last Wednesday by the enlarging of the spleen. The spleen weighed about twenty-two pounds, while in a normal condition it should only weigh a pound and a half.

A horse belonging to Mr. N. M. Quint attached to a tip cart, ran away on Main street last Thursday afternoon and was stopped at South Peabody without doing serious damage. He seemed to need a little more exercise and took it.

Mr. Henry Boynton, of this town, got the forefinger of his right hand crushed in a moulding machine at John Jenken's factory at Beverly, last Thursday.

Superintendent Geo. S. Drew of the Almshouse picked up a little fellow near the pumping station last Friday night who had lost his way. He was taken to the police station when he said his name was Marks and that he belonged in Lynn. His mother was sent for and came over and took away her precious offspring. She said he had run away to the circus and was afraid to come home. He was about four years old. That boy has got a future before him.

Dr. H. K. Foster successfully removed a pin from the throat of a two-year old child belonging to a Mr. Demerritt, living at Highland Park, last Saturday.

The first of last week a woman living on Northend street, named Lewis, was telling a woman who lived in the other part of the house, how much she knew about the use of a revolver that she held in her hand and belonged to her son, when it went off and the ball passed through a mirror hanging on the opposite wall and is now embedded in the wall.

Mary Duggan was before His Honor Monday afternoon for an assault upon Catherine Dorgan. Both parties reside in the old gamble roof house near the depot. Mrs. Dorgan testified that she was struck several times on her head and arm by Mrs. Duggan with a tin steamer, used as a coal hod. She also exhibited marks of blows upon her person. Defendant denied this, and accounted for the bruises upon Mrs. Dorgan's person by the fact that she had been quarreling with her husband. Mr. Dorgan, the husband, was present, and denied that there was any trouble between them. The officers testified to some disturbance Sunday night, but did not see any assault. Frank E. Farnham appeared for the complainant, E. T. McCarthy for the defendant.

In the police court yesterday Henry Bowers for being drunk was given two months at the Almshouse. George Alley, Neil McLaughlin and James Doherty were drunk and fined $1 and costs each. John Gray and Cornelius Sullivan, vagrancy, were placed on probation.

After Alley, McLaughlin and Dougherty were released, they were arrested for creating a disturbance at the house of Mr. Michael Kelley on Boston street where they attempted to assault Mr. Kelley's niece.

In the Superior Court in Salem, before Judge Pitman, yesterday, Ex. Judge S. J. Thomas, Esq., of Boston, made a motion to have the case of David T. Winter vs. the Lake Erie & Western Railroad transferred to the United States Court, at Boston, on the ground that sympathy was so strong for Mr. Winter in this locality, that no Essex County jury would ever bring in a verdict against him. Decision reserved.

The case of Currier vs the town of Peabody, for alleged damage by neglect in a highway at West Peabody, was tried yesterday in Salem and was decided in favor of the town. Henry Wardwell, Esq., for the town.

The wail of a granger: Grass is ripening early and some pieces of the popular orchard grass are nearly ready for the mowing machine. If the weather is favorable the harvesting of a large share of the first crop will be finished hereabout in the month of roses. Some of the mowing will be hastened on account of women trespassers. Parties with long dresses who think the earth is theirs wallow through stout grass in pursuit of daisies or other wild flowers, greatly to the disgust and damage of the farmers, who know that hay is worth a cent a pound, and who pride themselves on their unlodged crops.

One of our citizens cured his dog of killing chickens, by taking the slaughtered chicken by the legs, and after beating the dog with it, passed the legs each side of the dogs neck, and then tied them so that the chicken hung suspended to his neck. After carrying that chicken around for a couple of days, that dog was so disgusted that he would not look at a chicken.

it well deserves its reputation as the Standard Mower of America,

The Bullard
Hay Tedder,

is the only Tedder that has stood the test of time. A special feature of this machine (found in no other) is that the forks extend outside of the wheels, thus no tedded hay is run over and matted down, and the forks never become clogged in heavy grass.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST

The Tiger Rake.

In the eight years it has been before the public, it has distanced all its competitors. It is the only Hay Rake in actual use that has proved itself strong enough to stand all the tests of a SELF-DUMP HORSE HAY RAKE. It is the BEST RAKE EVER PUT UPON THE MARKET both for the superiority of its work, its unequalled construction and durability and the variety of work to which it can be applied. We also have in stock the

WALTER A. WOOD MOWER

This machine has been greatly improved. Its special advantages are its lightness and better distribution of weight.

We carry the largest stock of AGRICULTURAL and HAYING TOOLS in Essex Co., and as we buy directly from the manufacturers, we guarantee our price to be as low as the lowest and we are bound to sell. THE
GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE

For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of

B. LAURANCE'S
Axis Cut Pebbles.

The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in freestone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. A. C. P. and can only be purchased from

Spring Opening.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT.

SECOND FLOOR

We cordially invite the Ladies of Salem and vicinity to our Opening of the largest and most carefully selected stock of Millinery Goods ever shown in this city, including Trimmed Bonnets and Round Hats, both imported and of our own design and execution. In Fancy Laces and Silk Lisses, we have many elegant patterns, and in some of the most delicate tints, fairly rivalling the shadings of nature. In Flowers, which are to be so largely used the coming season, we have a most attractive display, as fresh as from the garden, only lacking fragrance. We have also in Untrimmed Hats and Bonnets, a very large assortment from the strongest School Hat to the finest foreign make. In fact everything which goes to make up a complete stock. Mrs. A. C. Washburn, our manager, was in New York at the Importers' Opening in Feb. securing many choice things at that time, and has kept close watch of the market up to the present time. Having through years of experience formed a large acquaintance with Importing as well as Jobbing Houses, which gives her great advantage in selecting Desirable Styles and making Lowest Prices. Miss Sadie Bushby will remain with us, as will also Miss Etta Brown and Miss Hattie Gliddin. We have also secured the services of Miss Carrie Palmer, who will join our corps of popular sales ladies. And now we feel sure almost every lady calling on us next week, or after, will meet an old acquaintance who will gladly show them every attention, and will take a personal interest in pleasing.

Cloaks, Suits and Shawls.

SPRING. 1886.

We take pleasure in announcing to the Ladies of Salem and Essex County, that we have now open and ready for inspection our full line of Ladies, Misses and Children's Outside Garments, Wraps, Shawls, etc., for Spring and Summer wear. We may venture to say without any egotism, that our selections in this department far surpass anything we have previously offered. The increasing demand for superior Ready Made Garments and Suits has led us to exercise unusual care in selecting none but the best, both in material and workmanship, and we guarantee all to be just as represented. We have every style and quality a lady can wish for. Long Garments for driving and travelling, Short Wraps and Jackets for street wear in every available shade and colors, both Foreign and American make. Suits, stylish and of superior quality. Shawls, India Chuddas, Boucle, Cashmere, and Fancy Embroidered Scarfs in all grades and shades. Children's Garments, simply beautiful in Boucle, English, German and American Goods. Our Infants' Department requires especial mention for its variety of Long and Short Robes, Cloaks, Slips and Blankets.

Jersey Waists, fancy colors beaded. Mikado fronts, Vest fronts, Plain fronts and braided, in every variety; and a great many more equally good things that we have not space to mention.

We cordially invite you to come and see for yourselves, assuring all courteous attention, and any information we can bestow.

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER;

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made. We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bousley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated with courtesy whether anything is desired or not.

Poet's Corner.

Alone.

Since she went home—
The evening shadows linger longer here,
The winter days fill so much of the year,
And even summer winds are chill and drear,
Since she went home.

Since she went home—
The robin's note has touched a minor strain,
The old glad songs breathe but a sad refrain,
And laughter sobs with hidden, bitter pain,
Since she went home.

Since she went home.
How still the empty rooms her presence blessed;
Untouched the pillow that her dear head pressed;
My lonely heart hath nowhere for its rest,
Since she went home.

Since she went home—
The long, long days have crept away like years,
The sunlight has been dimmed with doubts and tears,
And the dark nights have rained in lonely tears
Since she went home.

The Rhodora.

In May when the sea winds pierced our solitudes,
I found the fresh rhodora in the woods,
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook,
To please the desert and the sluggish brook;
The purple petals, fallen in the pool,
Made the black waters with their beauty gay—
Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.

Rhodora! if the sages ask thee why
This charm is wasted on the marsh and sky—
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing
Then beauty is its own excuse for being.
Why wert thou there, O rival of the rose!
I never thought to ask; I never knew;
But in my simple ignorance, suppose
The self-same power that brought me there brought you.

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Parted.

The silver brooks will miss thee,
The breeze that used to kiss thee,
And ruffle with a soft caress thy curls of sunny hair;
When the early dewdrops glisten
On the roses, they will listen
For thy step upon the garden walk, thy laughter in the air.

The meadows gay with flowers,
The summer's leafy bowers,
Will know thy joyous smile no more; the woodlands stand forlorn:
I hear the soft complaining
Of birds from mirth refraining,
That greeted with their carols sweet thy waking every morn.

Poor mother! hush thy weeping
Above thy darling sleeping,
Nor fret with aught of earthly grief the stillness where he lies,
Flowers in his little fingers,
Where the rosy flush still lingers,
For the angels are his playmates on the plains of Paradise.

Sunset.

Wearied with life's daily labor,
Its toiling, its fretting, its care—
I turn to my western window,
For I know rest awaiteth me there.

And I watch a magnificent sunset,
So grand and gloriously bright,
That the heavens rejoiced in its splendor,
Till it vanished in shades of night.

But this radiance of beautiful color,
Stole into my heart with its charm,
Till my soul with its mystical yearning,
Grew happy and peacefully calm.

Thank God for the beautiful heavens,
For the moon, and the stars, and the night
For color with its magical power
To bring such exquisite delight.

And I watch the vanishing glory.'
Till the greyness of darkness appears,
In my heart is ineffable gladness,
While mine eyes are misty with tears.

—Boston Traveller.

Oh, for a Man!

Oh, for a man! the clear voice sang,
And through the church the echo rang.
Oh, for a man! she sang again—
How could such sweetness plead in vain?

The bad boys grinned across the aisles,
The deacon's frowns were changed to smiles.
The singer's cheek turned deepest pink -
At base and tenor's wicked wink.

The girls that bore the alto part
Then took the strain with all their heart;
Oh, for a man, a man, a man—
And then the full voiced choir began

To sing with all their might and main
The finis to the girl's refrain.
Oh, for a mansion in the skies,
A man—a mansion in the skies.

Selected Story.

The Broken Engagement.

When Mary Clairmont's engagement was proclaimed to the world there ensued a general expression of surprise.

People generally are surprised at matrimonial engagements. There is always some cogent reason why things should have been adjusted otherwise—why John should have married Joan and Peter should prefer Betsey. Nobody was ever yet married to suit everybody.

But in Mary Clairmont's case it did really seem as if the course of true love had interfered seriously with the current of common sense and prudence.

Miss Clairmont was only one and twenty, a tall, imperial beauty, with dewy black eyes, a skin as fresh as damask roses, and dark brown hair, coiled in shining bands at the back of her head. Moreover, Miss Clairmont had a "career" before her She had just graduated from Medfield Medical University and taken out her diploma as an M. D.

And only to think of it, said aunt Jo, bursting into tears of vexation and disappointment, that she must needs go and ruin all her prospects by getting engaged to Harry Marlow, down in New York.

It does seem strange, aunt Jo, when I sit down and think of it, said Doctor Mary, laughing and blushing. Six months ago my profession was all the world to me. I neither wished nor cared for anything outside its limits. The future was all mapped out before me, without let or hindrance; and now—

Humph! said aunt Jo. Any brainless idiot can get married and keep a man's house and mend his shirts for him, but you were made for something higher and more dignified, Mary.

Mary's dew bright eyes sparkled.

Higher, aunt Jo? said she. More dignified? There you are mistaken. There is no higher or more dignified lot in life than that of the true wife of a noble husband.

Fiddlesticks! said aunt Jo; as if every poor fool who was dazzled by the glitter of a wedding ring didn't say the same thing! You've disappointed me, Mary Clairmont, and I'm ashamed of you, and that is the long and short of it.

Mary smiled.

Dear aunt Jo, said she, I shall not let my sword and shield rust, believe me. Harry has only his own talents to advance him in the world, and it will be a year at least before we shall be ready to marry. In the meantime I shall accept the post of visiting physician to the Aldenbury almshouse, and practice my profession in Aldenbury, just the same as if there were no engagement.

I wish to goodness there wasn't, said aunt Joe. I tell you what, Mary, I don't fancy that smiling, smooth tongued young man of yours and I never shall.

Still Doctor Mary Clairmont kept her temper.

I am sorry, aunt Jo, she said pleasantly. But I hope that you will eventually change your mind.

I used to keep a thread and needle store when I was a young woman, remarked aunt Jo, dryly, and I always could tell the ring of a counterfeit half dollar when a customer laid it on the counter. I could then, and I can now—and I tell you what, Mary, there's base metal about Harry Marlow.

Doctor Mary bit her lip.

Perhaps. We will not discuss the subject further, aunt Jo, she said, with quiet dignity, and the old lady said no more.

Aunt Jo is wrong! persisted the pretty young M. D. to herself.

Mary is making a fool of herself! thought aunt Jo.

Aldenbury was a pretty manufacturing village, with a main street, shaded by umbrageous maples, a "west end" where people who had made their fortunes lived comfortably in roomy old houses, surrounded by velvet lawns and terraced gardens; and an "east end" where people fought desperately and not always successfully, to keep soul and body together on the merest pittance.

And a little way out of the village the almshouses, built and endowed by a certain smuggling sea captain, whose conscience had pricked him during his latter days, raised their gray stone gables to the sky, and made a picturesque background to the landscape.

Doctor Mary Clairmont made something of a sensation at Aldenbury. Up to this time all the resident M. D.'s had been snuffy old gentlemen with wigs, or pert young ones with eyeglasses.

And the poor old people at the almshouse grew to love Doctor Mary and listen with eager ears for the sound of her carriage wheels over the blue gravel drive which led up to the portico.

A beautiful young lady who wrote prescriptions and compounded pills and potions was a novelty in the town, and by no means a disagreeable one. People rather liked the idea, once they had convinced themselves that the lady doctor thoroughly understood herself and her patients.

It was a brilliant December day when the young physician stood in the neatly carpeted reception room, drawing on her fur gloves previous to entering her neat phaeton once again, while she reiterated to the white capped maid some directions respecting Ann Mudgett's rheumatism, when the matron hurried in.

Oh, I beg your pardon, Doctor Clairmont, said she; but I clean forgot the new old woman.

That is, exclaimed Mrs. Cunningham, she only came last night—a quiet old soul, half blind, and quite bad with the asthma. Perhaps you had better just see her before you go. She brought a card of admission from Doctor Morton, the New York clergyman, who is one of our directors, you know; and she seems a decent body enough.

So Dr. Mary went cheerfully into the little brick paved room, with its white pallet bed, cushioned rocking chair, and neatly draped casement, where sat a poor little shrivelled up woman wrapped in a faded shawl.

She looked up timidly from under the borders of her cap as Doctor Mary came in.

I'm a poor body, miss, said she, and I'm sensible I'm making a deal of trouble in the world. But the Lord don't always take us, miss, when we'd like to go.

This is the Doctor, said Mrs. Cunningham.

The little woman would have risen up to make a feeble courtesy, but Doctor Mary motioned her to keep her seat.

What is your name,said she pleasantly.

Louise Marlow, miss.

Marlow? That is an unusual name, isn't it? said Mary Clairmont, coloring in spite of herself.

We're English, miss, said the old woman, struggling bravely with her asthma. There ain't many of us in this country. I've a son, miss, in the law business, as any mother might be proud of.

A son, echoed Mrs. Cunnigham; and you in the almshouse.

Not that it's his fault, ma'am, the old creature made haste to explain.

My son is to be married to a fine, proud, young lady, as is fit for any young prince in the land, and of course he can't expect to burden himself with a helpless old woman like me. He says I'm to write and let him know how I get along, and if I'm sick, or anything, he will try to see me. I sewed carpets until the asthma got hold of me, and supported myself comfortably. But of course I couldn't lay up anything for a rainy day— who could? And Henry couldn't help me, for he was getting ready to be married, poor lad! So I went to Doctor Morton and asked him if he knew of any decent place where an old woman like me could end her days in peace; and he gave me a card to come here, and some money to pay my travelling expenses—God bless him—and here I am.

Mary Clairmont had listened quietly to the garrulous tale, but color had varied in her cheek more than once as she stood there.

Is your son's name Harry Marlow? she said, slowly and thoughtfully.

Yes, miss, at your service, said the old woman, with a duck of her white capped head, which was meant to do duty in place of the impossible courtesy.

Is he like this? said Doctor Mary, taking a photograph from her pocket.

The old woman, with trembling hands, fitted on her iron bowed spectacles, looked at the picture, and uttered a little cry of recognition.

Sure, miss, it's his own self, she cried, you're acquainted with him then.

Somewhat, said Doctor Mary composedly, as she returned the photograph to its place. And now I will leave you something to relieve this difficulty in breathing.

But the old woman eyed her wistfully.

Perhaps you know the young lady my son is to marry.

Yes, said Doctor Mary, writing something in her prescription book; I have seen her.

Perhaps, miss, faltered the old woman you would give her my humble duty, and tell her I would just like to look at her for once and see what she is like. There's no fear of my troubling her, miss, for I mean to end my days here. But I would like to see her just once. And if it wouldn't be too much, miss, would you please write to my son, and tell him where I am, for I'm no scholar, myself, and I'm his mother after all.

I will write to him, said Doctor Mary, quietly; and so she went away.

I never saw a lady doctor afore, said old Mrs. Marlow, with a long sigh; but she's a pretty creature, and it seems good to have her around. I hope she'll come again soon.

You may be very sure of that said the matron brusquely; Doctor Clairmont ain't one to neglect poor people because they are poor.

That evening aunt Jo, frying crullers over the kitchen fire, was surprised by a visit from her neice, who came in, all wrapped in furs with her cheeks crimsoned with the frosty winter air.

Bless me! this ain't never you, said aunt Jo, peering over the rims of her spectacles.

I drove over to see you, aunt Jo, said Mary, to tell you that you were right. The metal was counterfeit.

Eh, said aunt Joe, mechanically ladling out the brown, curly crullers although she did not look at what she was doing.

I have written to Harry Marlow, cancelling our engagement, said Doctor Mary, calmly, albeit her voice faltered a little. The man who will heartlessly let his old mother go into an almshouse, sooner than take the trouble to maintain her, can be no fit husband for any woman.

And then she sat down by the fire and told aunt Jo everything; for crabbed, crusty old aunt Jo had been like a mother to her, and the girl's heart was full to overflowing.

When she had ceased speaking, aunt Jo nodded her head.

You have done well and wisely, said she.

Old Mrs. Marlow died that winter in Aldenbury almhouse, with her head on Doctor Mary Clairmont's arm, and never knew that her garrulous confessions had deprived her son of his promised wife.

And Mary says quietly and resolutely that her profession must be husband and home to her henceforth.

Just what it ought to be, says aunt Jo. No woman ever yet succeeded in doing two things at once.

TIRED, LANGUID, DULL exactly expresses the condition of thousands of people at this season. The depressive effects of warm weather, and the weak condition of the body, can only be corrected by the use of a reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why suffer longer when a remedy is so close at hand? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will give you untold wealth in health, strength and energy.

White roses make the air fragrant!

Hay Fever and Rose Cold are attended by an inflamed condition of the lining membrane of the nostrils, tear ducts and throat, affecting the lungs. An acrid mucus is secreted, the discharge is accompanied with a burning sensation. There are severe spasms of sneezing, frequent attacks of headache, watery and inflamed eyes. Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy that can be depended upon. 50 cents at druggists; by mail, registered, 60 cents. Ely Brothers, Druggists, Oswego, N. Y.

Hunt up the fly trap!

In no other blood medicine have the results of scientific inquiry been so steadily utilized as in Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

GENERAL NOTES.

An important new departure in the running arrangements of the Fall River line will take effect next Monday. Going west a train will leave Boston at 6 p. m. to connect with a steamer which will leave Fall River at 7.30, and Newport at 9 o'clock, arriving in New York at 7.20 a. m. A second train will start from Boston at 7 p. m., run to Fall River without a stop, and connect there with a second steamer, which will leave at 8.25 p. m. for New York without stopping at Newport. This will reach New York at 7.30 a. m. Coming this way the first boat will leave New York at 5.30 p. m., and connect with a train from Fall River at 5.20 a. m., which will arrive in Boston at 6.50. The second boat will start from New York at 6.15 p. m., reach Newport about 6 a. m., and Fall River after 7, connecting with a second train for Boston, leaving Fall River at 7.30, and arriving in this city at 9 o'clock. There will thus be, as it were, an accommodation boat, a through express boat each way on week days. On Sundays only one line will be operated, leaving Boston at 7 o'clock and touching at Newport, and on the return leaving New York at 5.30, also touching at Newport. The second special express, which is to run from Boston in connection with the direct steamer, and from Fall River in connection with the Newport and Fall River steamer, will have an entirely new equipment of very handsome cars built for the line by the Pullman company. The direct boat will of course be the popular one going to New York from Boston, while the other will accommodate better those passengers coming this way who do not desire to rise early in the morning.

Senators Camden and Kenna of West Virginia called on the President the other day and invited him to visit them in the spring and whip the mountain streams of their State for bass. They backed up their invitation by glowing descriptions of the scenery and by commenting upon the invigorating effect of the mountain air. They finished by telling the President a series of fish stories which just made him long for an opportunity to remove a few West Virginia bass from their present offices. He said, however: "Gentlemen, your fish stories remind me of one I once heard. A fellow related to a chance acquaintance a wonderful fish story, and as he concluded asked, "Now doesn't that surprise you?" 'No,' was the prompt reply, 'because I am a liar myself.'" Neither of the West Virginia senators had presence of mind enough to exclaim "Chestnuts" as the President finished his story, or perhaps it was politeness which prevented them from sitting in judgment on a presidential joke. At any rate they retired laughing from Mr. Cleveland's presence, and with his promise that he would take their invitation into consideration.

HOW MUCH like children we are. A friend or paper can merit our friendship for years, show us many kind attentions, but one little mistake, thoughtless slight or failure to please us, and the whole baking is spoiled; our eyes become blinded to all past kindness or favors, and like the ungrateful child, we give full vent to imaginary revenge. Can we not broaden our charity with profit to ourselves and others?

"Is there a variance? enter Charity's door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Despairing quacks with curses left the place,
And vile attorneys, now a useless race."

The Odd Fellows' Rebekah degree, by which females are admitted to the order, is named for Rebekah who was the wife of Isaac and the mother of Esau and Jacob. She was a very pretty girl and smart, as appeared by her action at the well, but she became a crafty old woman and like many mothers, taking to the youngest son, helped Jacob deceive his blind old father and steal the birth-right of the elder brother, whereby Jacob became the head of the Israelites.

The opinion is generally entertained among farmers and others that lightning never strikes a beech tree. Careful inquiries have failed to produce a single instance of beech so struck. It is said that not only the Indians, but the wild animals have an instinctive knowledge of the security from lightning afforded by the beech, and some assert that our domestic cattle give evidence of it.

The latest absurdity is The Worcester Christian Weekly, published by Pratt Bros., of Marlboro, the very expensive outfit for this new publication being a new heading, with the balance about the same as the one paper published by this firm, with some thirty different aliases. What claim the sheet has to being a religious paper we cannot conceive unless the age of its news items entitle them to a place in history. Giving a small boy many names is no proof of a large family. Carrying so many sails for a small craft is a waste of wind.—Westboro Chronotype.

The show windows of W. G. Webber & Co., of Salem, have been attracting a deal of attention from the ladies the past two weeks. The displays have been remarkable for any firm.

THE COMING SEASON.—Judging from the "ads" in the several papers and the prospective arrangements of the several railroads and steamboat lines, the coming season is likely to prove one of great profit as well as pleasure to the owners and proprietors of seaside and mountain resorts. The Boston and Lowell, under the supervision of Lucius Tuttle, is laying out largely for mountain travel; the Fitchburg has its Lake Walden and the Tunnel, which, under the management of General Superintendent Adams, promises to be of unusual attraction, the late disaster will only add to the desire to travel over this route. Manager Furber of the Boston & Maine is up and dressed, and his chief assistant, General Douglas Frazer, is making up a nice programme for the Eastern coach. The short travel on this route, such as Beverly, Swampscott, Marblehead and Gloucester, needs no backing from your correspondent. I think a half hour in an early June morning between Somerville and Salem would add ten years of life to the most inveterate dyspeptic who ever lived. The Old Colony, which is virtually a sort of Hingham property, for, if tradition is correct, the first impulse to build this road came from Hingham, is dressing itself up to meet all exigencies in the way of excursions, etc. If one looks at the railroad map of New England, he will find that the Old Colony is exceptionally blessed in being free of entangling alliances. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., never uttered a more correct sentiment than when he said the Old Colony railroad system was the most perfect in the United States.—Hingham Journal.

The "Fresh Air Fund," Boston, has entered upon its seventh season of benevolent work. The expenditrue of five dollars gives a ride into the suburbs of the city to one hundred persons; ten dollars enables thirty-three persons to enjoy a sail to Nantasket Beach; and twenty five dollars conveys one hundred persons to Franklin Park, and provides for them an abundant dinner. All who desire to have a share in this charity, which brings so much refreshment to poor and feeble mothers and their children who would not otherwise enjoy a day in the country or at the seashore, are requested to send their donations to Rev. D. W. Waldron, 19 Congregational House Boston, Mass.

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

Unknown to Others

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared with the greatest skill and care, by pharmacists of education and long experience. Hence it is a medicine worthy of entire confidence. If you suffer from scrofula, salt rheum, or any disease of the blood, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, or kidney and liver complaints, catarrh or rheumatism, do not fail to try

A book containing many additional statements of cures will be sent to all who desire.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

The next issue of the PRESS will be Thursday, July 1, on account of the Graduating Exercises of the High school.

THE MUSICAL festival, last week, was a powerful and convincing argument in favor of the study of music, as a regular branch of instruction in our schools. With many people it is the only argument that could be used. The practical in life has become such a factor with a class of citizens in their thoughts of a common school education, that music has been regarded as an accomplishment to be attained only by the few. The work of last week must have dispelled that illusion, and it is to such people that an exhibition of this nature is addressed. Outside of the harmonizing influence which it exerts upon the discipline of the school, referred to in the School Report, it is of great aid in fostering the social elements in the home. It was shown that our young masters and misses, scarcely in their teens, could read and sing an ordinary hymn tune by note. If this study is further kept up, they will be found to use this knowledge in the home and in the church. The power of music as an influence has long been recognized by the Church, and this is notably true of the Romish Church. In no other church is the music so grand and inspiring, and in no other church is its value so recognized. In many Protestant churches anything is allowed to pass for music. Yet this Church apparently puts an estimate on its value. The power of the rising generation will be exerted towards a better class of music in our Protestant churches, and a better interpretation of what is rendered. It may be Congregational singing, yet be far in advance of the feeble attempts at music by many of our choirs. In the large cities of Brooklyn, New York and Boston, where a portion of the music is rendered by the congregation as well as the choir, the result of the study of music by the young people in the public schools is apparent. Let an observer in this town note the difference in the congregational singing at the Methodist church, since the study of music began in our public schools. It is very perceptible. The young people of the congregation join heartily in the songs of worship, and give very material aid.

As an influence in the home, its power is inestimable, and if manifested in no other direction, it is worthy of all the time given to its teaching. The prosperity of this country already begets temptations to undermine the home. Every element to counteract such temptations should be welcomed and encouraged. Sap the foundations of the home, and you sap the foundations of the prosperity of this country or any country. The time of Rome's greatest success was the time of its greatest danger. That danger was not averted—it began with the violation of the sanctity of the home. The frequency of divorces, the ease with which the gods of our household are destroyed, and its fires extinguished, has already become a source of alarm to those who read rightly the forecast of history. Music in the household is an element of harmony which will do and can do much towards the elevation of home. Other influences have their weight, but this is of no small importance. The time has gone by when the study of music is to be considered as the privilege of the favored few, who alone can worship at her temple. The fires burn brightly at her altar, where all may partake of its privileges.

SPARKS.

Last Friday evening, Steamer 1 was taken to the brook on Endicott street, and given a trial to see if the engine was in good working order, and also to test the 1150 feet of new hose, just purchased. Steam was raised to 20 pounds in just 4 minutes, and in 9 minutes with the furnace door open, the steam was blowing off with the gauge registering 80 pounds. The hose was tested with a pressure of 120 pounds' and everything was satisfactory.

Hook & Ladder Company No 1, held a meeting last Friday evening and voted to purchase a set of new rubber coats. Joseph W. Durkee was elected a member of the company in place of William H. Joll, transferred.

The bell striker for the fire alarm will be attached to the bell on the South Church. The fire alarm whistle arrived Saturday, and will soon be put in position at the pumping station. The whistle is one of the Crosby patent chime whistles, is 36 inches in length by 10 inches in diameter and weighs 150 pounds. The contract for the putting in of the alarm, was to be carried out by the 6th of July, so that in all probability the other parts of the apparatus will soon be put in position.

The Chemical Hand Fire pump was successfully exhibited yesterday forenoon, in the presence of a very large crowd, and a very heavy fire quickly extinguished.

Within the next thirty days, each town and city government must appoint one or more so-called "forest-fire wards," whose duties shall be to post copies of the act and Chapter 163 of the acts of the year 1882 in two or more public places; to investigate all cases of fire in woodlands and report thereon to the mayor of the city or to the selectmen of the town, who in their discretion shall cause complaints to be made for violation of the provisions hereof. The act also provides that the engineers of fire departments in cities where a fire department esists, shall have and exercise the powers and duties herein prescribed for forest fire wards, and in towns of less than 300 voters the selectmen may serve as forest fire wards.

The Hook & Ladder truck was taken to Dole & Osgood's yesterday afternoon in order to have shutter' bolts rigged on the Bangor ladder.

The members of Hose Company No. 1 and friends presented Chief Engineer S. H. Buxton with a handsome chief's fire hat and white rubber coat last evening. The company with their invited guests, in all numbering about forty-eight, sat down to a bountiful repast, consisting of strawberries, cake, ice cream, fruit, etc., prepared by Janitor Patterson, in the room of the Overseers of the Poor at the Town House. Previous to sitting down, Foreman Thomas in a few appropriate remarks presented Chief Buxton with the hat and coat and the Chief responded as best he could. The hat is one of Cairns & Brothers' New York hats, is painted white, has forty-eight combs, patent ventilators and lining, and has a handsomely painted front bearing the picture of a horse hose carriage and the word "Chief" and the letters S. H. B. A silver plate on the rim is inscribed "Presented by Eagle Hose No. 1 and friends of Peabody." After the supper cigars were lighted and short speeches were made by Chief Buxton, Engineers Johnson, Southwick and Reed, President Littlefield of the Relief Association, the foremen of the different companies and others. The party broke up early, well pleased with their entertainment.

The Hook and Ladder base ball club has received a challenge from the West Lynn firemen's base ball nine. The aarangements have not been completed yet.

The fire alarm whistle is on exhibition in Spaulding's window. The bell of the whistle is 10 inches in diameter by 21 in length and weighs 114 pounds. Elbridge G. Kelley will begin work to-morrow to put it up on the pumping station, where it will set 8 feet above the roof. It will take a 2 1-2 inch steam pipe to supply it. The boxes will arrive July 1st, and the other apparatus the first of next week.

Hook & Ladder No. 1 received their new rubber coats from the Franklin Rubber Company yesterday.

Many of our exchanges have been running for the past two weeks the following announcement:

Messrs. Lewis, Brown & Co., of this city have just placed an extensive advertising contract for the "Three-Legged Brand" of knitting yarns with C. S. Gosse, the Kilby Street advertising agent.

Suppose they have? We fail to see anything remarkable about it.

Mr. L. Cunningham the Salem shoe dealer invites any of our readers who are troubled with tender feet to try a pair of Geove's soft shoes, designed especially for tender feet, which are giving excellent satisfaction.

Francis H. Appleton has removed from Boston to his summer residence in Lynnfield.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

The injuries to Mrs. Edward Blaney as reported last week were quite serious. The particulars are that Mrs. Blaney was visiting Mrs. Plumer and patted the dog on the head when the animal sprang at her and took her face between his jaws. His mistress called him away or he might have done her more serious injury. The dog tore the flesh in several places on Mrs. Blaney's face, the most serious being a piece from the corner of the eye, which it is feared will affect the tear tube. Mrs. Blaney's many friends congratulate her on her escape from more serious injury. The dog was killed Thursday.

The report was current last week that Henry Nathan, the barber who left town a while ago leaving numerous unpaid bills, was working at his trade in Chicago.

Mr. Ulick Brophy feels bad at the death of his little spaniel pup which was run over on Boston street last Thursday by Mr. Elbridge Rust's team. The little fellow was driven under the wheels by a larger dog.

Mr. Daniel Rahilley, the junk man, has been suffering from the effects of a nail that was accidentally driven into his foot last Thursday.

Last Friday some one shot a pet cat belonging to Mr. H. F. Walker. Complaints are very numerous concerning this kind of pastime, and an example should be made of a few of the offenders.

A little four year old son of Charles Ford stepped on an iron garden rake last Friday, and the teeth entered his right foot making a painful wound.

One of N. M. Quint's horses fell on Oak street last Saturday but did no serious injury. Slight damage to the harness.

Mr. James H. Bradley, a carriage painter, went on a spree to Boston about the first of the month. After squandering a good deal of money he came back to town and last Friday was seen on the street suffering from an attack of delirium tremens. The poor fellow was in a fearful state of mind when he was arrested by Officer Goodwin and locked up in the padded cell. Saturday morning Doctors Pike and Foster made an examination and he was removed to the Danvers Asylum.

Some one threw a stone and smashed the large plate glass front in the store of Mr. George H. Jacobs in Blaney's Block last Friday night. A small hole was made through the glass and it was cracked in all directions. It will cost probably $50 to replace it. The party who did it went to Mr. Blaney and explained the accident.

Some one entered the currying shop of R. S. D. Symonds on Spring street, last Sunday, ransacked the desk and stole a number of lead pencils and private papers.

Mrs. William Norton, of Brandon, Pa., is visiting in town. On Memorial day she placed flowers on the graves of her husband and only son. The husband was a Confederate soldier and the son was a Union soldier, and both were killed during the war.

Mr. John H. Sutton took a "header" on Merrimac street, Lawrence, last Saturday, and was badly bruised and shaken up. Dr. Well, who chanced to be near, rendered service.—Lawrence American.

Wilber F. Mackintire of Lowell attempted to lift a heavy rail on the line of the South Reading track last Thursday, and in doing so lost his balance and fell over the embankment, carrying the rail with him. He was seriously bruised about the body and complained of pain internally.

In the police court Monday Maurice Galway for being drunk was fined $5 and costs, and not having the cash, went down to the house of correction for two months. Mary A. Murphy, Mary A. Keefe and Patrick Fenton were each fined $1 and costs for being drunk.

Janitor Patterson found a little boy on Main street Sunday, and took him to the station, where he was afterwards claimed by a resident of Central street.

H. Carroll Hardy, employed by Heath Brothers, tinmen, took a header on his bicycle and sprained his wrist.

James Murphy was fined $1.00 and costs this morning by Judge Merrill, and not having the needful went down for a short vacation.

Patrick Lyons, one of the victims of the Boston fire, is an uncle of the tonsorial artist of the same name in this town.

Mr. William Donnell who has handled large quantities of Ammonia during the past few years, has prepared it for household use and put it up in quart and pint bottles which he is selling at the low price of 25 and 15 cents. The strength of this ammonia is several per cent stronger than any now on the market. Mr. Daniel Goodrich, the hulled corn man, will supply his customers with this article, and also Donnell's magic lustre for polishing silver, etc.

Mrs. E. H. Porter is on a visit to Lyman, Maine.

STUPENDOUS AMUSEMENT COMBINATION.

THE WILD WEST SHOW ATTACHED TO TO-FOREPAUGH'S GREAT EXHIBITION. IT COMES TO SALEM, JUNE 30TH.

The veteran manager Forepaugh having secured a living specimen of every rare animal for his famous menagerie, and placed upon his pay-rolls all the leading lights in the equestrian world, has for several years been casting about for more attractions, notwithstanding he has always had many times the largest and best tented exhibition in the universe. To this end, and for the season of 1886 he has added, in all its entirety, the of the famous Capt. A. H. Bogardus, the champion rifle shot of the world, including a large delegation of genuine Comanche, Arrapahoe, Apache, Kiowa, Sioux, Cheyenne, Pawnee and Osage Indians; also a company of veritable cowboys, scouts, hunters and plainsmen—together with wild buffaloes, elk, Indian ponies, &c., &c. Capt. Bogardus, as is well known, was formerly associated with Buffalo Bill, and lately has been exhibiting this Wild West show which he now joins with Forepaugh's exhibition, and both are exhibited together, under an immense pavilion covering a half-mile race track and seating 20,000 people.

A ticket to Forepaugh's enables the holder to witness this famous frontier show, and the great menagerie, circus, hippodrome and all. Thus, it will be seen, how vast and varied is the entertainment which is thus offered to the public, for the usual price of a circus ticket. It has cost Forepaugh fully a to make this deal. But the plucky old manager considers cost a secondary consideration, in comparison with having not only the greatest but the most attractive show on the road. Here in this Wild West Show is represented all the stirring and dangerous episodes of life in the far west. Such as existed before the Pacific railroad was built. Representations are given of carrying the mail by what were called "pony express riders." The

ROBBERY OF THE OVERLAND MAIL

is illustrated in the most realistic manner. The old Deadwood coach is introduced, drawn by six horses and driven by a former knight of the whip employed by the Overland Mail company. The pursuit by Indians, chase and defense by cowboys, and all-round encounter by Indians on one side and cowboys aided by passengers on the other are presented in the most realistic manner, always exciting intense enthusiasm and affording a real picture of

PILLAGE AND INDIAN FIGHTING

on the plains in the wild west. A representation of an Indian village is also presented, with brawny braves, squaws, papooses, etc. Included among the red skins are the Indian chiefs Bald Eagle and Raven Feather—illustrations are given of kindling the council fires, tomahawking and scalping, running the gauntlet, war dances, etc., etc. The cowboys also introduce their bucking ponies, which is one of the most mirthful, and at the same time, dangerous pastimes of the plains. Capt. Bogardus, "the man who shoots to kill," who has scored a 1,000 victories with his rifle and shot gun—also gives exhibitions of his marksmanship; and introduces his four sons, the youngest of schoolboy age, who will hit target bell 16 times in 20 seconds—and all four of the lads will give examples of their wonderful proficiency in shooting. Still another feature will be the exhibition of buffalo hunting and other sports indulged in on the frontier. In the street parade from the Rocky Mountains leads the Wild West cavalcade, discoursing the music of the plains. The old Deadwood coach is also introduced, and Indians, ranchmen, etc., all appear clad in border costumes, mounted on Indian ponies. All this it should be remembered is in addition to the great features presented in the four ring circus, where such riders as Showles and Belmont and Carrol appear; where the wonderful Elliot family in their amazing bicycle, tricycle and unicycle performances are seen; where A. Forepaugh's "Blondin" horse walks the tight rope, and his great herd of trained elephants appear; where an ark full of wild animals, and hundreds of distinguished actors from every land and clime are to be seen in a series of wonderful, new and amusing acts.

GENUINE COW BAND

F. M. Bemis, representing Thos. Kane & Co., of Chicago, was in town to-day, with a plan of the seats for the Peabody Institute. The plan has been accepted and the seats will probably be put in, during August. The chairs are considered models of beauty and convenience, and will make a great addition to the hall.

The engineers of the Boston & Maine R. R. have been in town for several days surveying for a spur track on Foster street.

A lawn party was given last evening by William H. Brown to the young people of the Unitarian Church in Marblehead. The grounds were illuminated and refreshments served.

There is in full bloom at the residence of W. S. Mayhew, on Franklin street, a magnolia tree. It was set out a number of years ago by his father, and is probably the only one in town. The fragrance of the flowers can be detected a long distance.

A man from out of town was here one day last week looking over the field and calculating his chances should he start a ten cent express business here. These routes are very popular in some places, being kept busy all the time doing errands.

The June meeting of the Essex Congregational Club will be held on Monday evening the 28th inst. Supper will be served at 6.30. and the topic of the evening will be presented by Rev. W. E. Strong, of Beverly, in a paper entitled "Worship in our Congregational churches."

We desire our readers should note the popular fast train to Chicago over the the Vermont Central R. R. is now running. Leaving Boston at 1 P. M. daily, there is but one change of coaches between Manchester, N. H., and Chicago,—at the Union depot in Montreal. The rates on this line are always lower than on any other, and we call attention to this very important fact.

TESTIMONIAL FROM PROF. BILL.
W. J. LEFAVOUR, Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to be able to endorse the Ivers & Pond piano. In resonance, volubility, firmness and purity of tone it will compare favorably with any piano made in the country. I heartily recommend it to the public and my friends who are intending to purchase. Yours truly, C. R. Bill, teacher of music in public schools.

Medium priced Furniture, especially adapted to seashore and country cottages, can be found at Paine's Furniture Company Boston, in great variety and at very low prices.

The Peabody Press.

Wednesday Evening, June 23, 1886,

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Sunday Globe thus speaks of the proposed improvements in the property of Messrs. Joseph H. snd Albert F. Poor of this town, at Salem. The recent purchase of the Atlantic Car Works by the Messrs. Poor of Peabody for a tannery means a great deal for the interests of Salem. The purchasers have begun fitting the place for the new business. A spur track will be built from the Eastern road and run directly through the grounds so that bark and hides can be landed directly at the mill, and leather shipped without teaming, thus lessening the expense fo production. A contract has been made with J. F. Farren, the Boston street carpenter, for the improvements. There are about 3000 cubic yards of earth to be excavated, and this job has been sublet to Parsons & Peterson who have a gang of men and teams at work. When the excavations are complete, Mr. Farren will put in some 400 vats 4 feet 6 inches by 5 feet 7 inches and 5 feet deep; six coolers, 10 by 30 feet, 4 feet 6 inches deep; sixteen steepers, 12 feet in diameter; two junks, 20 by 20 feet, 10 feet deep; thirty two soaks, 10 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, with a dozen more pits of different sizes. The work will consume 300,000 feet of lumber. A new steam chimney will be built, 12 feet square at base and 6 feet square at the summit, 100 feet high. This will connect with the present boilers and new ones will be added. The present chimney, which is about 75 feet high, will be taken down and the bricks used in the new one. The work will take three months to complete. The lumber for the vats will be brought directly on the cars, and matching machines will be set up there and the work done on the spot. Drains will be laid beneath the vats and connected by plugs, so that the waste liquors can be drawn off. There will be a large demand for tenements in this part of the city when the works get in running order.

The Springfield Republican has the following regarding the marriage of William H. Emerson in that city. Mr. Emerson and wife will for the present reside at Baldwin's Hotel. "The pleasant Salem-street home of Marcus Houghton was crowded with friends and well wishers last night, on the occasion of Miss Katie E. Houghton's marriage to William H. Emerson of Boston. Some of the invited guests came from Lynn, Boston and Newport, and of those from this city many were from the State-street Methodist church, in whose social and benevolent enterprises Miss Houghton has taken so prominent a part. The rooms were adorned with a profusion of fragrant flowers, arches of roses and banks of wild flowers filling the corners and overhanging the doors. The presents which were costly and beautiful, were tastefully arranged in the drawing-room, where they were examined and admired through the evening. A little before 8 o'clock the bride and groom quietly took their places under an arch of roses in the parlor. Rev. William A. Thurston of Lynn attended them as best man, and Miss Josie Merritt of this city as bridesmaid. Fred T. Mills of Boston and George H. Kemater of this city were ushers. The bride wore a costume of white china silk, en train, with pointed neck and long sleeves, adorned with pearl front and trimmings. Three ministers participated in the beautiful Episcopal service, Rev. Michael Burnham reading the opening address, Rev. Dr. Rogers taking the pledges, and Rev. F. F. Emerson of Newport, R. I., offering the prayer. No sooner were the couple pronounced man and wife than they were made the recipients of countless congratulations and good wishes by their friends. A reception followed, lasting till nearly 10 o'clock, when Mr. and Mrs. Emerson drove away amid showers of rice, to take the New York train.

The trustees of the Essex Agricultural Society held their annual meeting last Wednesday in Newburyport. John D. Kingsbury, of Bradford, was chosen orator, and the list of committees for the coming fair was made up. The following gentlemen from this town are on committees: Elbridge Mansfield, fat cattle; James P. King, working oxen and steers; Francis H. Appleton, family horses; Andrew M. Curtis, farm and draft horses; E. P. Barrett, colts four years old; Geo H. Poor, colts two years old; John L. Colcord, Jr., swine; James Marsh, sheep; Chas E. Emerton, plowing with three horses; John E. Herrick, agricultural implements; Geo. M. Foster, apples; Francis H. Appleton, vegetables; James P. King, grain; Thomas Carroll, leather manufactures; J. Needham, general merchandise; Mrs. James P. King, work by children. The committees on premiums are, James P. King, John L. Colcord, Jr., F. H. Appleton, J. S. Needham, E. P. Barrett.

An exhibition of drawing and writing by the scholars of the public schools was given in the room of the School Committee, in the town house, Saturday afternoon. The drawings and specimens of penmanship had been previously examined by a Committee and marked in three grades, Excellent, Superior and Good. This was done by the Committee while the specimens were numbered. When they had been marked, the name was affixed by Mr. Osgood, of the School Committee. Much creditable work has been shown in both drawing and writing. The schools have had good instruction and the scholars have profited by the instruction. The specimens in writing began with the lowest class in the primary schools, and went to the first class in the grammar. Many of the specimens were so uniform, that it was a very delicate matter to make any distinction in marking. The exhibit Saturday was very neatly arranged, and the goodly attendance there showed the interest manifested by the scholars and their friends in the results attained.

At the meeting of the South Danvers Female Benevolent Society, held in the South Church vestry Friday June 18th 1886, the following Officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. L. W. Thacher; Vice Presidents, Mrs. C. H. Goulding, Mrs. Augustus Harrington; Treasurer, Miss Augusta Daniels; Secretary, Miss Addie A. Little. District Committee No 1, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Little, Mrs. Frank C. Merrill, Mrs. Joseph Jacobs Jr., Mrs. D. P. Grosvenor; District No.2, Miss Martha Hutchinson, Mrs. J. W. Hudson, Mrs. Caleb F. Winchester, Mrs. George H. Poor; District No. 3, Mrs. James Buxton, Mrs. Franklin Osborne, Mrs. D. B. Lord, Miss Martha Barrett; District No. 4, Mrs. Warren Shaw, Mrs. Rufus H. Brown, Mrs. William P. Clark, Mrs. Hannah Brown. Collector of Ladies' Assessments, Miss Helen Brown, Miss Lucy Osborne, Miss Annie Thorndike, Miss Alice Patterson; Gentlemen's, Miss Mary N. Farley, Miss Mary A. Southwick, Miss Ellen Lord, Miss Alice Perkins.

There seems to be a little trouble at the Wallis school. A number of the graduating class refused to sing at the musical festival, because a piece which had been assigned them was taken away and another with which they were more familiar substituted. The insubordination was followed by a punishment in the shape of a special test at the school house on Wednesday, while the others were at the town hall preparing for the festival. Friday when they returned they were told there was no seat for them till they had made a public apology. This they refused to do and took their belongings and left school. They did not come in for their tests on Monday when the school was examined. This reduces the graduating class to nine. The school committee have as yet taken no action in the matter.

The Peabodys played an interesting game of ball with the Naumkeags last Thursday morning and were defeated, the score standing 5 to 7 at the end of the fifth inning. The following is the score:

Ida Patterson, a young lady employed at C. K. Hutchinson's, died at Lowell last Friday where she had been called to attend her sister who was sick with what was thought to be an abscess in the throat. It proved to be malignant diphtheria and the sister died Tuesday and Ida was stricken with the disease and died on Thursday. The young lady was respected by a large circle of friends and was an active member of the Baptist Church. She was 23 years of age.

The graduating exercises of the Peabody High School will take place next Thursday afternoon, July 1st, at 2.30 o'clock, in the Town Hall. The doors of the Chestnut street entrance will be opened at twenty minutes of two for those holding reserved seat tickets, and at two o'clock the doors will be opened to the public. The Valedictory will be given by Miss Mabel M. Brown; the Salutatory by Miss Percy Grosvenor; the Class History by Miss Jennie Goldthwait.

Judge Pitman rendered his decision yesterday morning in the Winter case by giving the New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. permission to try the case in the U. S. Circuit court in Boston. Corporations have things about their own way in this country.

George H. Jacobs & Co. have rented the quarters now occupied by the post-office, and as soon as the latter is transfered to the new building, carpenter Putnam will fit up the new store for Jacobs & Co's. clothing business. The partitions will be taken down, so as to make one large room, drawers and shelves put in, and show windows constructed. Their present store will be occupied by a Mr. Hall, of Amherst, with a full line of dry goods.—Danvers Mirror.

Mr. F. A. Herman is canvassing this town for advertisements for the Naumkeag Directory. Mr. Meek proposes to make this a very complete number and it will contain a deal of information of local interest, besides a steel plate of the late General H. K. Oliver. A large number of copies containing the advertisements and other information will be distributed free through the country.

Mr. Jonathan Preston, father of F. G. Preston, Esq., of this town, died at his residence on Boston street last Friday evening at the age of 61 years and 9 months. He had been confined to his house for several weeks with pneumonia and heart trouble. He has been an industrious and respected citizen of Salem for many years and had many friends in this town. He leaves a widow, one son and a daughter. His funeral took place last Monday.

At a meeting of Masconomo Tribe No. 11, Improved Order of Red Men last Thursday evening officers were elected as follows: Prophet, Charles A. Weare; Sachem, Ezra H. Shannon; Senior Sagamore, Charles C. Dodge; Junior Sagamore, Charles S. Goldthwait. The officers will be installed at the next meeting of the tribe. A committee was appointed to provide refreshments.

Mr. Urban C. Roberts and Miss Carrie Trask, eldest daughter of Mr. Warren Trask, were united in marriage last Wednesday evening. Rev. J. W. Hudson officiated. The newly married couple have tastefully furnished a home on Kosciusko street where after the ceremony they gave a reception to their immediate friends and relatives. They were the recipients of a large number of useful and ornamental presents and start in life with the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

The following is the Treasurer's report of the Ladies' Benevolent Society:

Balance May 5, 1885,	$84.14
Am't. received during the year,	1652.46
Total,	$1736.60
Am't. expended during the year,	$597.33
Am't. invested in seven shares in S. Danvers National Bank,	1015.00
Balance May 5, 1886,	124.27

$1000 of the amount received and invested was the legacy of Mr. Perley King.

The early rising maxim advocated by Benj. Franklin is comparatively easy to follow these mornings when the sun lights up a scene of vernal beauty; when the balmy air is resonant with the music of countless feathered songsters, and when the morning fire can be kindled without coming in contact with an atmosphere that is suggestive of the thermometer being away down in the vicinity of zero.

The committee representing the local assemblies of the Knights of Labor are talking over plans for the grand union picnic at Canobie Lake, Windham, N. H., on Thursday, July 22. The programme will include an extensive list of sports and music and dancing. All the arrangements are in the hands of a general committee and sub-committees are appointed to perfect the arrangements.

A rose show will be held in the Essex Institute Rooms, Daland House, Wednesday, June 23, from 11 A. M. to 6 P. M. Contributions of roses and other choice flowers are solicited. Members of the Institute are invited to be present with their friends. No admission fee will be charged. Prizes for the best exhibits will be given.

Mrs. James W. Wilkins, of this town who with her son William W. Wilkins, of Brockton, has been spending some months in Texas and Clover Bend, Arkansas, returned last week. Her daughter residing in Clover Bend, returned with her and will spend a short time in this town.

The County Commissioners will meet in their office in Salem, August 3, at 9 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of redistrscting the county for representatives. Essex county now has thirty-three representatives, and under the new apportionment will have one additional member.

Mr. Thomas E. Proctor is utilizing the new freight railroad at his place, by building a line of track the whole length of his factory on Webster street and running spur tracks to his bark mill, and rear of the factory, besides the original track used for loaded cars.

The Salem Brass Band has been engaged for the St. John's C. T. A. Society picnic at Oak Island, July 5. Tickets are in the hands of the committee who will make every effort to make this one of the best picnics ever held by the St. John's.

BENEFIT DAY,

Wednesday, June 23,

SPECIAL PRICES

FOR ONE DAY ONLY!

Each week do we continue to surprise the public by presenting what seems to be the most impossible values. As our patrons appreciate this effort on our part, we shall continue to make special purchases at special prices for Wednesday, endeavoring to secure sufficient quantities to last during the the day, and we beg the indulgence of the ladies when such is not the case, and when possible we shall take their orders to be delivered within two days. As all are aware by this time, our regular stock contains unprecedented values, our variety is unexcelled, and our prices guaranteed the lowest. Money refunded on all purchases proving unsatisfactory within a reasonable time.

Among the thousand and one Bargains to be obtained this week, will be a manufacturers' stock of

SAMPLE PARASOLS
AND UMBRELLAS,

AT PRICES HALVED.

We draw public attention to the unequalled facilities we enjoy for quoting the very lowest prices on CARPETS and UPHOLSTERY. These two departments being situated on our third floor, where they are easily accessible by a large first-class elevator, the rent is merely nominal, and our great saving in this direction enables us to sell you goods much lower than can be procured elsewhere.

STRAW MATTINGS.

We are receiving fresh new goods in Straw Mattings—desirable patterns.—Come in the forenoon, if convenient.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Should be kept constantly at hand, for use in emergencies of the household. Many a mother, startled in the night by the ominous sounds of Croup, finds the little sufferer, with red and swollen face, gasping for air. In such cases Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is invaluable. Mrs. Emma Gedney, 159 West 128 st., New York, writes: "While in the country, last winter, my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with Croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was tried in small and frequent doses, and, in less than half an hour, the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Pectoral saved my darling's life." Mrs. Chas. B. Landon, Guilford, Conn., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Saved My Life,

and also the life of my little son. As he is troubled with Croup, I dare not be without this remedy in the house." Mrs. J. Gregg, Lowell, Mass., writes: "My children have repeatedly taken Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for Coughs and Croup. It gives immediate relief, followed by cure." Mrs. Mary E. Evans, Scranton, Pa., writes: "I have two little boys, both of whom have been, from infancy, subject to violent attacks of Croup. About six months ago we began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it acts like a charm. In a few minutes after the child takes it, he breathes easily and rests well. Every mother ought to know what a blessing I have found in Ayer's Cherry Pectoral." Mrs. Wm. C. Reid, Freehold, N. J., writes: "In our family, Ayer's medicines have been blessings for many years. In cases of Colds and Coughs, we take

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

and the inconvenience is soon forgotten."

Book Notices.

One of the most striking and attractive figures of the American newspaper world is Mrs. Frank Leslie. In law she is Frank Leslie without the "Mrs." It was her husband's dying request that she should take the necessary legal steps for assuming his name and continuing his business. The name was known the world over in connection with the illustrated publications he had been issuing, and that was why it was a matter of moment that she should take it. To all checks, to all business letters, the lady signs the name "Frank Leslie" in a sweeping, strong, graceful hand. There was no time left for the beautiful young widow to mourn when her husband died. She was and is as dainty and refined as the most tenderly cherished lady alive, yet there were before her stern, unpleasant duties which demanded the heroic strength that often fails a powerful man. The Frank Leslie business affairs seemed almost hopelessly entangled. The high credit, the existence itself of the house, were imperilled. A great sum of money was needed at once.

"Oh, if I could only find some woman to lend me $50,000!" exclaimed Mrs. Leslie. It sounds like a romance, but there really was a woman, Mrs. Thomas K. Smith of Brooklyn, who heard of her sister woman's need, and really advanced the large sum. How it was repaid long before it came due, how the slender woman worked till she extricated her affairs from difficulty and put the business upon a solid basis again, all the world knows. She fought her way through lawsuits, and came out victorious in each.

Her journalistic enterprise, her "nose for news," as we say in newspaperdom, would enable her to manage a metropolitan daily. When President Garfield was shot and later, when he died, she had the melancholy scenes of those days pictured and printed and on the tables of her readers far in advance of her slow-paced weekly rivals. She has that invaluable faculty which seizes on the newsy and picturesque in a flash and utilizes it. The money got from the enormous sale of the weekly at the time of the Garfield assassination was that which largely repaid the loan from Mrs. Smith and put the great house upon its feet again. It is now a splendid property, worth nearly or quite a million dollars, and this lady is the owner and head of it all.

Personally, she is one of the handsomest women in New York. She has a clear, bright complexion and large, wonderful gray eyes with dark, curling lashes. They are ready alike with a smile or a tear and are radiant with expression. Her figure and carriage are peculiarly fine. She is of Huguenot extraction and was born in the French quarter of New Orleans. She speaks several languages; in French, Spanish and English she is equally at home, while her voice is singularly musical.

Before the business cares of a publisher occupied her so completely, Mrs. Leslie used often to write for the press. Novels, sketches and travels from her pen are well known. In her office the famous woman publisher dresses in plain black. At the opera and receptions she is splendid in diamonds and laces that were earned by the resources of her own strong brain. She has many warm friends among the best known literary and artistic people of the day, in this country and in Europe.

The strongest article in the forth-coming July Harper's is on The New York Produce Exchange, by Dr. Richard Wheatly. Like his article in the previous volume on The New York Stock Exchange, it is carefully written, replete with information, and highly interesting. Every live business man will welcome such a thorough exposition of the great centre of our mercantile system. The history of the institution is traced from the rude thatched shed in Peter Stuyvesant's time, about which the tradesmen clustered, to the present magnificent temple of commerce costing three and a quarter millions. The features of this colossal structure are detailed, and the method of its gigantic operations is fully explained. Twenty superb illustrations adorn the article, five of them being full pages, and one of these represents the interior of the Chicago Board of Trade.

North's Philadelphia Musical Journal for June is not only an unusually bright and readable paper, full of general musical news, but it presents matter of vital interest to both musician and amateur. With this number is begun the department of "Musical Philadelphia." It is the intention to make this department very full; and inasmuch as this is the only strictly musical journal in that city, it takes special interest in all local matters. In the next number they propose to give an amusing and interesting article on outdoor music, called "Musical Summer Rambles around Philadelphia." The sheet music, of which there are sixteen pages in each number, this month consists of Geibel's charming new piano piece, Joys of the Dance, The Concert Company, or a Manager in Despair, an amusing vocal sketch, and four pages from Meyer's Recreations for Piano or Organ. Subscription, one dollar per annum, in advance; single copies, ten cents. Published by F. A. North & Co., 1308 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Baby Pathfinder for June 15th, corrected up to date, is on our table. It is the most convenient form in which to consult the railroad arrangements in New England that is before the public. It costs only 5 cents, and is worth five times that amount to any traveller.

YOUR HAIR

should be your crowning glory. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the vitality and color of youth to hair that has become thin and faded; and, where the glands are not decayed or absorbed, will cause a new growth on bald heads.

MAY the youthful color and vigor of the hair be preserved to old age? Read the following, from Mrs. G. Norton, Somerville, Mass.: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past 30 years, and, although I am upwards of 60, my hair is as abundant and glossy to-day as when I was 25."

BE assured, that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor will convince you of its powers. Mrs. M. E. Goff, Leadville, Col., writes: "Two years ago, my hair having almost entirely fallen out, I commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. To-day my hair is 29 inches long, fine, strong, and healthy."

RENEWED and strengthened by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair regains its youthful color and vitality. Rev. H. P. Williamson, Davidson College, Mecklenburg Co., N. C., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the last ten years. It is an excellent preservative."

BY the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, Geo. A. Dadman, Waterloo, Mo., had his hair restored to its original healthy condition. He was nearly bald, and very gray. He writes: "Only four bottles of the Vigor were required to restore my hair to its youthful color and quantity."

USING Ayer's Hair Vigor cures diseases of the scalp. F. H. Foster, Princeton, Ind., writes: "I had been troubled for years with a disease of the scalp; my head was covered with dandruff, and the hair dry and harsh. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave me immediate relief, cleansed the scalp, and rendered the hair soft and pliable."

ELDER PUB. CO., Chicago,

THE USUAL RESULT.—It is not to be denied that a good sewing machine is one of the most important appurtenances of the modern household. We thought we had a good machine until one day the agent of the New Home presented himself at our door and proceeded to deliver an oration upon its characteristic merits. "But," we answered, "our machine suits us well and we do not care for another. The agent, however, begged the privilege of leaving one of his machines with us, for the ladies to try. The request was not unreasonable, so we granted it—but more to oblige the agent than anything else; for we really did not want the machine, and had not the remotest idea of buying it. The machine once in the house, it was natural that the ladies should look it over; they did so, and as a consequence fell in love with it. They say that without the slightest wish to decry or disparage any other machine, this, all things considered, is, in their opinion, the most desirable one to be had. This unrivalled machine is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Co., Orange, Mass., and 30 Union Square, New York.

The two volumes recently issued by the Boston and Lowell Railroad under the titles of "Summer Saunterings by the Boston and Lowell" and "Winnipesaukee and About There" are just what is needed by the traveling public, and are designed for the purpose of conveying knowledge such as the traveler requires and oftentimes finds it difficult to acquire. As a guide, they are as near perfection as possible, the situation of localities and all pertaining thereto having been carefully collated and jotted down in a very pleasing manner, such as forms reading of the most enjoyable character, while other information of route, hotel and map is set forth in a manner clear and concise, giving facts of the most available kind in the best possible way to give them. Mr. Lucius Tuttle, the General Passenger Agent of the Boston and Lowell Road, who is the author of these "Books of Travel," has no equal as a writer and compiler of such works, and in these, his recent efforts, he has placed before the public a large amount of information, the character of which is of the most interesting nature.

Prof. Richard T. Ely, Ph. D., of John Hopkins University, one of our most eminent political economists, is writing a course of timely articles entitled Social Studies, in which the perplexing economic issues of the day will be thoroughly discussed. The first part in Harper's Magazine for July, the Nature of the Railway Problem, is introductory to the great subject of Railway Abuses and Reforms.

No article in the July number of the Atlantic will attract more attention than the Autocrat's engaging description of his first visit to Europe, more than fifty years ago. Philip Gilbert Hamerton gives the first paper of his series, "French and English," which bids fair to be as interesting and valuable as his delightful book "Round my House". George Frederic Parsons' vigorous, clearly reasoned and extremely sensible paper on "The Labor Question" is a timely contribution. John Fiske has another noteworthy article relating to the time of confusion and almost bankruptcy succeeding the Revolutionary War. The Princess Casamassima, perhaps the strongest novel Mr. James has ever written, grows absorbingly interesting. The Contributors' Club and Books of the Months complete a remarkable number, which fitly opens the fifty eighth volume of the magazine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The July number of Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine opens with an article by the Rev. Frederick Pemberton on The Charter house London: Its Hospitals and public schools, with a number of quaint and curious illustrations, including a portrait of Sir Thomas Sutton, the founder. Five more beautiful illustrations of Luray Cave, in Page Co., Va., are given, with descriptions. Mr. Thos. Powell contributes a musical reminiscence of Carl Maria Von Weber in London; and Mrs, Angeline E. Alexander makes A Plea for Girls in her usual forcible and pleasant manner. There are many short sketches and poems and a number of full page beautiful engravings. This number is the first of the twentieth volume, and this is a good time to subscribe for the magazine.

Bowen's Budget, Fort Plain, N. Y., for March, 1886, says: In the multiplicity of medicines placed upon the market, it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between the meritorious and the worthless. There are at least two excellent remedies widely used, the efficiency of which are unquestioned. We refer to St. Jacobs Oil and Red Star Cough Cure.

Another washout—on the clothes line.

Solicitor of Patents, F. O. McCleary, of Washington, D. C., says the only thing that did him any good, when suffering with a severe cough of several weeks standing, was Red Star Cough Cure which is purely vegetable and free from opiates and poison.

Already the noisy clatter of the mowing machine is heard in the land.

There are many forms of nervous debility in men that yield to the use of Carter's Iron Pills. Those who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. should try them.

Harvest will come early this year!

The worst blood diseases are cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Its effects are felt immediately.

Sea bathing is in order!

A pure and reliable medicine. A compound fluid extract of roots, leaves, barks and berries is Burdock Blood Bitters. They cure all diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys.

THE LADIES'

DONGOLA!

OFFICE OF ORDWAY & CLARK,

MANUFACTURERS OF

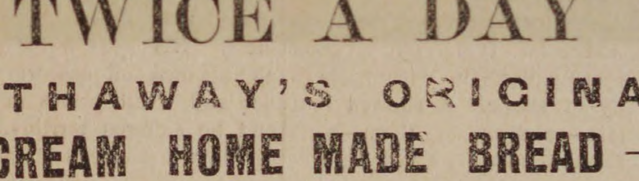
LADIES' FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.

HAVERHILL, MASS., February 25, 1886.

MR. WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

DEAR SIR: We have this day sent you a large invoice of our justly celebrated DONGOLA BOOTS. You will find they are all that has been claimed for them. and far ahead and entirely different from Kangaroo, Glove or Mat Kid. There is no other boot made for Ladies' wear which, for softness of finish, elegance of fit combined with such lasting durability, will give the entire satisfaction of this boot. They are something that has long been needed, as they wear better than French or American Kid, and will not stretch, turn purple, or look rusty. So popular and unprecedented has become the demand for these goods throughout the country, as the merits of the leather have become known, and so limited the importation of skins out of which the goods are manufactured, and so many imitations under similar names have been placed upon the market, that it has been found necessary to copyright the name.

NONE ARE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED WITH OUR AGENTS NAME UPON THE SOLE, THUS:



Also the word "DONGOLA" upon the inside lining.

We shall give you the EXCLUSIVE SALE OF THESE BOOTS IN YOUR CITY, feeling confident with your large trade that they will find a ready market, judging from the large sales they have met with in other cities. Respectfully yours,

ORDWAY & CLARK.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The musical festival of the public schools of this town was held in the Town Hall, last Thursday afternoon. The scholars from the grammar schools of the Centre, Wallis and Bowditch districts, numbering about 450 pupils, took part. Elevated seats were built upon the stage, after the manner of the stage at Mechanic Hall at the concerts of the Oratorio Society, and the children as they were seated presented a very pleasing sight. The young misses were mostly dressed in light colors, and were arranged on one side of the stage with the boys on the other. Miss Mary Bill presided at the piano and Mrs. J. C. Foote at the organ—both being in the orchestra in front of the stage. The affair was conducted by C. R. Bill, who has been teacher of music in our public schools for two years.

A large portion of the selections rendered were from a pamphlet arrangement of concert songs, and school festival music, which were distributed to the schools when the first arrangements for the festival began, and on which they have been working until the time of the Festival, last Thursday. The programme consisted of some twenty-five selections in chorus and three part songs, and a selection for the Center, Bowditch and Wallis schools, each. The singing in each case was creditable to the scholars and the director, showing careful practice and knowledge of the pieces on the part of the children. The tempo in some of the selections was taken too fast by the director, necessitating the omission of some notes by the sopranos where the intervals were difficult, but this was scarcely noticeable, and was unavoidable under the circumstances. The children were not under the perfect control of the baton of the director, as was shown in the attack on the pieces at the outset, and in the singing of "America," when the scholars were disposed to sing without any reference to the baton. But these are small defects compared with the general excellence of the singing. The parts were well sustained, the altos of the boys being a little loud in some of the pieces, but they showed their ability to carry the three parts in both time and tune. The latter was especially commendable, the young misses singing to G above the staff without apparent effort and always in tune. One of the best renderings—if not the best—was the three part song of "The Bell," by the scholars of the Bowditch school. The piece was not only difficult in time, but the intervals were hard. It was sung correctly and in a manner which would have been creditable to any body of singers—even those of large practice and familiarity with music. The song "See the setting sun is firing" was also well done. This was by a selected class from the three schools—the class which we understand is to join with the Beverly scholars in exhibiting some of the results of the method pursued by Mr. Bill in the schools, before the Music Teachers' National Association.

Two advertised exercises on the programme were omitted: the exercise in the time language and sight singing by the scholars of the 7th class in the Wallis school; and the singing at sight from printed form by the scholars of the upper classes in all the schools. We regard this as unfortunate, because much stress had been laid previously on this test which was to be given, and which was to show the ability of the scholars, as a whole, to read music at sight. We do not forget the substitution of an exercise conducted by Prof. Luther M. Mason on the blackboard, in which a picked class of about sixty-five out of the 400 sang several exercises from the blackboard at sight, in three parts, and also sang two exercises at sight from memory after the notes had been erased from the board. These tests were very valuable for the scholars who took part. They are deserving of great praise. But how about the rest of the scholars on the stage, to whom this test or a similar one was not applied? We have reason to believe, from reliable information, that those who were left could have submitted to a similar test. We believe that the slip selected by Mr. Bill, and which was not used, would have been sung by the majority of the scholars on the stage, at sight, and we regret that it was not deemed best to try the experiment.

Having said this much about the concert, there is one thing relative to the preparation for the Festival which ought not to be omitted, particularly as this was a public festival, under the control and authority of the School Committee, and announced as being given to show the results and progress of the scholars in music since the introduction of music as a regular branch of instruction under Mr. Bill. This is the time taken for rehearsal in all of the schools, on the pieces. It is admitted that the most valuable result to be shown was the ability to read at sight. This was to be done without preparation, and consequently required none. The other pieces, of course, required some preparation—by mass rehearsal and otherwise. But so much time has been taken that the work in music by the musical instructor has been neglected in the primary schools to a considerable extent, and in the South Peabody and outlying districts the visits of the instructor have been almost entirely suspended during the preparation for this Festival. We do not wonder that these latter schools feel that they have been neglected. Of course the committee know best whether it was wisdom to omit them from the representation in the Festival, but it surely was not a wise thing to omit, in addition, the regular visits of the instructor, if such instruction was deemed as valuable as would appear from the annual report.

With these few exceptions, the festival was a success. It showed that good work is being done in our schools in the study of music. It showed that the pupils—or some of them—were able to read an ordinary hymn tune at sight. And in commending the work of Mr. Bill we must not forget the valuable assistance and aid given to this branch of study by the teachers of the schools. They have been interested in the work and in the progress of the scholars, and to them, no less than to Mr. Bill is due a large share of the success of the Festival.

The Salem Gazette in referring to the musical festival in Salem, gives its readers the following valuable information. Other papers in Salem have been led into the same error: "This notice, however, would not be complete without mention of the presence of Dr. Lowell Mason, the eminent musician and director, who gave the Bentley primary girls a little drill on the charts, the result of which won from him warm praise." The Gazette must be a believer in Spiritualism. Dr. Lowell Mason has been dead for a dozen years, or thereabouts.

The presence of Prof. Luther W. Mason was a noticeable feature of our exhibition last Thursday. Mr. Mason has a happy faculty of interesting children, and it seemed that under his magnetic influence the scholars could do anything. He was not a stranger to the children, having visited one or more of the schools, with Prof. Bill, before the concert, and he was also present at the rehearsal in the morning. Prof. Mason is the author of the books used by the schools here in their music, and it is his method of instruction which Mr. Bill teaches to the schools. He has recently returned from Japan where he has been introducing his system under the patronage of the government. There were present with him Thursday afternoon, at the festival, the wife of the Japanese minister in Washington, and Miss Kin Kato, the young lady sent over by the Japanese government to take a course of instruction in the Normal School at Salem.

We are informed that Prof. Mason has in press a new series of musical works, and that he desires to have them used here in exchange for the series which is at present in use.

Last Sunday was Trinity Sunday and the special music at St. John's church, under Charles A. Clark, attracted many attendants at the vesper service at 3 P. M. The programme was given by us last week consisting of Alois F. Lejeal's Vespers, with solos by Miss Ducey and Mr. Horrigan, and the rendering of Bach-Gounod's Ave Maria by violin and organ, the violin being given by F. C. Record, and the singing of Dana's "Salve Regina" by Mrs. E. R. Bigelow, of Salem. The accompaniments, on the organ, by Mr. Clark were especially noticeable, and the excellence of the entire service was very marked.

Miss Perry, of Danvers, sung soprano in the choir of the Baptist church last Sunday.

Benjamin M. Kenney, of Salem, is singing tenor at the South church in this town.

Mr. J. J Carew, formerly organist of St. John's church, was in town last Monday evening for a short time, in company with Michael Griffin, organist of St. Joseph's Church, Lynn. Mr. Carew is now organist of St. Augustine Church in South Boston, where he has a fine choir under his direction.

Miss Nellie Noonan, of Lynn, sister of Mrs. Daniel A. Caskin, formerly of this town, was in town last Thursday, attending the Musical Festival.

The Salem Brass Band will play at Portsmouth, N. H., to-morrow, having the right of the line in the Masonic procession, it being St. John's day. It is worthy of mention that this band served in the same capacity in Portsmouth fifty years ago. This band has also been engaged by the city of Salem July 5th.

The Salem Cadet Band play every Sunday at the Willows. The band gave their first concert last Sunday and was finely received by a large audience. This band have only two days in each week open for engagements during the entire summer. They will play to-day at the Old Ladies' Home lawn party in Lynnfield, and for the reception in Town Hall by the graduating class.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Last Thursday forenoon Edward F. Needham and James Parker were at work in Merrows' ledge at South Peabody, and were seriously injured by the premature discharge of a blast. They had prepared several holes in the ledge with several blasting cartridges, and were trying the experiment of blasting them by electricity, the cartridges being connected by wires to the battery. They thought that all of the cartridges did not explode, and after an examination found that it was true of one of them. They then begun to remove the cartridge when it exploded. Parker received the contents in his face, knocking him down, and also Needham who was close beside him. The men were removed to their homes and it was found that Parker was injured the most. His eyes were badly burned, and his face and neck were full of powder and small pieces of copper wire, and he suffered terribly. His lip and wrist were also considerably lacerated, and he was struck in the chest by an iron bar. Needham while suffering considerable pain was not so badly injured as his companion. The powder and copper wire had entered his face, and his finger was broken, besides several bruises.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a Strawberry Festival in the vesty of the church to-morrow evening. Strawberries and ice cream will be for sale, and there will be a confectionery table and apron sale. There will be also an entertainment consisting of select readings and vocal music. Doors open at 7.30, entertainment begins at 8. Admission 10 cents. Children 5 cents.

Last Wednesday evening, a bicyclist named Hardy attempted to cross the track in front of the L. & B. horse cars, when he fell and his machine collided with the car and the little wheel was smashed. The machine was a new one of the Star pattern.

Mrs. John Brown started for Chicago, Tuesday, to be absent about a month. Mrs. F. C. Blake will take her place as organist at the church while she is away.

Improvements are being made on Mr. Warren Shaw's residence on Lynn street.

A large party from Lynn had a picnic at Bartholomew's pond last Sunday.

The L. & B. Company will put on half hour cars the first of the month on this end of the route.

Mr. Benjamin Wiggin of So. Peabody is dangerously sick at his home and grave doubts are expressed concerning his recovery. He was poisoned about two weeks ago while handling skins at Poor's tannery and his arm was so badly swelled that he went to a physician but blood poison soon reached the lungs and he has had numerous bleeding spells. Last Monday, pneumonia set in and he is in a critical condition.

Mrs. Flavel H. Goodwin was given a surprise at her home on Granite street last Wednesday evening. Refreshments were served and during the evening she was presented with a handsome hanging lamp.

Edwin P. Whipple, a well known author, critic and lecturer, died in Boston last Wednesday. Mr. Whipple had lectured several times in our Peabody Institute Course. He was an Essex County man, having been born in Gloucester, March 8, 1819. One of his ancestors was a signer of the declaration of Independence. Mr. Whipple was a voluminous writer. At the time of his death he had in hand materials for a series of articles for the Harpers of New York.

THE
GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE
For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of
B. LAURANCE'S
Axis Cut Pebbles.

The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in freestone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. Z. A. GALLUP, - - - - - MANAGER

There is an item going the rounds of the county papers which says the women of Peabody pay a tax on a million of dollars. If this is true the assessors would like to know who they are.

The shipments of leather and skins from Peabody and Salem for the week ending June 26 were 5655 rolls, 255 sides, 329 bundles, 25 barrels, 12 bags of leather, 14 bundles, 2 casks of skins.

Charles Farrington, the well known grocers' clerk, is the latest youth to wrestle with a bicycle. He rode to Beverly, and returned the other night without accident, and of course feels happy.

We notice a rather rudely constructed seat under one of the elm trees near the railroad station. We presume this was put up by the improvement society and that they will be extended to all the shade trees in town.

A neat appearance is in keeping with a proper observance of the "Glorious Fourth" no one is tastefully dressed unless they have a stylish and good fitting pair of shoes. Nugent's is the place to buy them. *

The new house of Mr. Jesse H. Smith is staked out on the corner of Lowell street and the lane leading to Franklin street. The contract for the carpenter work is not yet awarded. It will be a two tenement house.

None of the suspended pupils at the Wallis School were present to try for admission to the high school yesterday. The special test given them for the afternoon of the rehearsal was not a punishment but simply to keep them to work.

At the last meeting of the Trustees of Boston University Rev. Daniel Steele, D. D., formerly of the Methodist church in this town, was unanimously invited to serve as Acting Professor of Systematic Theology in the School of Theology the coming year.

It is said that the Board of Assessors have had the heads of several business firms and a number of wealthy farmers before them and questioned them concerning the amount they are paying taxes on and as a result the town will be benefitted.

Mr. B. D. Blaisdell has resigned his position in the Lechmere Bank of Cambridge, and accepted a similar one in the Broadway bank in Boston. William Abbott, formerly with the South Danvers, has taken the position left vacant by Mr. B.

At the Selectmen's meeting last Saturday Mr. Charles H. Goulding was appointed Registrar of Voters in place of J. Henry Osgood who declined to serve. B. H. Taylor of West Peabody and Lewis Brown of South Peabody were appointed Forest Fire Wardens.

Rev. Joseph H. Mansfield, the presiding elder of this district of the New England Methodist Episcopal Conference, has received the honorary degree of doctor of divinity from two institutions, the New Orleans University and Baker University at Lawrence, Kansas.

There is in the woods leading from Lowell street, a cotton wood tree, probably the only one in town. The ground is covered with cotton fuzz, as are all the trees in the vicinity, which a short distance away resembles a lot of cotton wool flying through the air.

A small company gathered in the South Church vestry last evening to listen to Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drake from Iroquois, Dakota. Mrs. Drake was the principal speaker and delighted all present by her very interesting way of describing their work in Kingsbury County.

Lane's photographic car which was said to be going to Onset Bay, started last Thursday and the first stopping place was Danvers, where it is located near Pettengill & Barry's express office. At that rate it will be a little late in the season before it reaches its destination.

Mr. Gibson, the new flag man on the South Reading Branch, takes a great interest in the looks of the railroad station, and keeps the platform walks cleanly swept, the gravel triangular piece raked over, and the flowers in the urns watered and in good condition. The inside of the station also speaks for his cleanliness. The next important thing should be the removal of the fountain.

Last Thursday evening the Edgewood Club of the Baptist Church met at the vestry and elected officers as follows:—President, Ira Vaughn; Vice Presidents, Archibald Israel, Miss Carrie Gee and Miss Alice Hart; Treasurer, F. H. Upton; Secretary, George H. Rowell.

Our neighboring town of Danvers is preparing to celebrate the Fourth of July, and among the gentlemen having the matter in charge, are N. H. Poor of the firm of Poor & Littlefield, F. H. Caskin, formerly of D. A. & F. H. Caskin, and S. A. H. Williams the partner of Mr. Geo. H. Jacobs in the clothing business.

A Detroit, Minn., paper in speaking of a former resident says: John A. Teague went to St. Paul, Wednesday night, on business. Mr. Teague has resided in this country for nearly fourteen years and only once before during this long period has he visited the metropolis. John, assisted by Dr. Holt, probably "painted the town."

Owing to the change in time, the following changes have been made in the mails:—The Salem mail in the morning will close at 10.05 instead of 10.20 as heretofore, and in the after noon at 1.40 instead of 1.45. Boston mails will close at 8.20 instead of 8.30 10.05 a. m. and 1.40 p. m. Mails received from Salem and Boston at 7 and 8.35 instead of 8.40.

The Salem & Danvers road has made a change in the running time between Peabody and Danvers. Cars now leave Peabody for Danvers at 8.35 A. M. and every hour until 1.35 P. M., then every half hour from 2.20 until 10.50 P. M. Leave Peabody square for Salem at 7.55 A. M. and every hour until 12.55, after that every half hour until 10.10 P. M.

Improvements have been made in the store of J. V. & J. Hanson on Central street. The rear part has had a new floor laid and brick pillars built under it and it will in future be used as a store room instead of a stable as heretofore. This was made necessary by the largely increasing trade of the firm. They have hired the George Stevens stable on Stevens street a short distance away.

CLASS OF '86.

Graduating Exercises in Town Hall.

IRISHMEN AS FACTORS IN HISTORY.

Ireland is without doubt one of the most ancient nations of Europe. She has, above all peoples of the earth, suffered in her reputation from the ignorant and too often malicious injustice of writers, who were either awed by the opinion of others or incapable of discrimination themselves. They have gathered up her blunders, they have laughed at her tatters, but who has lifted those tatters and shown to the world that under them is buried every noble principle that could elevate a people? Ireland can compete with the nations in brain and muscle. She sends her sons into the world to fill its highest stations. You may look for them in every walk of life. You will find them now in your public offices and in high places of honor, and again in your streets pick in hand, but always with the same contented smile, and this day laborer will tell you he never complains, because "he took his pick at the start and has never grumbled." I am inclined to think that the representation of Atlas with the world on his shoulders was originally intended for an Irishman—at any rate the world has always been "down on" him.

The world pays homage to her scientists for their works and discoveries. To Joseph Black the world owes the discovery of latent heat. James Watt always acknowledged that he had been indebted to the instruction and information received from him for the improvements that he made in the steam engine. Considered as a philosopher, Dr. Black ranks among the highest of those who have wrought out great theories. To Robert Boyle the physicists of the day acknowledged their obligations in the strongest terms. The value of his contributions to the cause of science, to the province of natural philosophy especially, cannot be too highly rated. What a splendid eulogy is that of the great Boerhave! "Mr. Boyle, the ornament of his age and country, succeeded to the genius of the great Counsellor Verulam. Which of all Mr. Boyle's works shall I name? All of them! To him we owe the secrets of fire, air, water, animals, fossils; so that from his works may be deduced the whole system of natural knowledge." To James S. Muspratt the world is indebted for one of the most valuable and elaborate earlier works on chemistry in the English language. And to-day, no physicist is the superior, hardly one the peer—of another great Irishman, John Tyndall, who left some thousands of dollars, the proceeds of his lecture tour through the United States, to aid American students of science. Is it such men as these whom the descendants of the Puritans have in mind when they express their dread of "Irish influence!"

Of the intellectual grandeur of Ireland's great writers it is needless to speak. The names and works of Swift, Steele, Goldsmith, Burke and Sheridan—all foremost ornaments of English (?) literature—will live to the end of time. The pages of modern history are replete with the deeds of valor performed by Irish soldiers in the armies of the European powers, and their prowess on the battle-field has been admitted by even their most inveterate enemies. On many a toughly contested field and in many a bloody conflict, have the pluck and skill of the Irish race been tried and never found wanting. History records no deeds of heroic daring more splendid or decisive than the glorious achievements in France, Spain, Austria and America, of Irish exiles who

> "Fought as they reveled, > Fast, fiery and true."

The name of Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington, the "Prince of Waterloo," stands foremost among Ireland's great soldiers. It is unnecessary to recount by what a series of master-strokes, overcoming a thousand difficulties, he defeated Napoleon's greatest generals, and how Sir Arthur Wellesley, who left Cork in 1808, on the 14th day of May, 1814, had beaten the French entirely out of Spain and entered Paris on the 4th of May as Duke of Wellington, acknowleged to be the second captain in Europe, the recipient of rich estates in England and the Peninsula, and of almost every honor that it was in the power of two nations to bestow. But it is not in Europe alone that the valor of Irish troops has won the admiration of the world. The records of the American Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, our several Indian wars, and our recent Civil War, all attest that the Irish soldiery of the present day have lost none of the prestige which marked the courage of the Celts of the past.

Every American is familiar with the names and careers of Sheridan, Kearney, Shields, Meagher, Montgomery and multitudes of others whose deeds need no mention. Are these the men whose services native born Americans recall when they shake their heads at the predominance of the Irish element in our national politics? The history of Ireland's patriot Robert Emmet is known to the civilized world. How untiring he was in his exertions in the cause of Ireland! Always firm, determined and hopeful, devising plans, turning over in his mind all the fearful chances of the intended struggle, well knowing the great odds against him, yet confident of success, exaggerating its probability, despising the difficulties which beset him on every hand, judging of others by himself, thinking associates honest who seemed to be so, confiding in their promises, and animated, or rather inflamed, by a burning sense of the wrongs of his country, and enthusiastic in his devotion to what he considered its rightful cause.

Of Ireland's orators and statesmen, O'Connell, Burke, Curran and Flood stand foremost. Burke was one of the greatest orators, statesmen and authors of his age, a man whose name will long continue to be celebrated, and one who, had he fallen during the meridian of his fame and character, would have scarcely been considered as second to any. Of J. P. Curran, Byron says: "The riches of his Irish imagination were exhaustless. I have heard that man speak more poetry than I have ever seen written, though I saw him seldom." His faults stand redeemed by the splendor of his talents, and the virtuous affection he bore his native country. Henry Flood was a distinguished statesman and orator. Endowed with remarkable eloquence, indomitable courage and a singularly acute judgment, he had every attainment for a leader of public opinion. But "the curse of Swift was upon him, to have been born an Irishman and a man of genius and to have used his talents for his country's good." Daniel O'Connell, the "Liberator," was one of the most eloquent men, one of the most successful statesmen that Ireland has given to history. From 1713 till the fall of Napoleon, Great Britain was in Europe the leading state, while Ireland, weak and insignificant, lay at her feet. O'Connell made her a nation; a nation whose continued discontent has dragged England down, until the happiness of her homes can only be secured by granting to Ireland her every demand. That is Ireland's condition to-day. What was her condition when O'Connell first undertook to espouse her cause? An island torn and racked by race hatred and religious bigotry, her army led by an Irish Protestant, her evilest enemy ruling the senate, and her people beyond the reach of the great reform engines of modern times, since they were unable to read or write.

But O'Connell, out of this most abject and weak of kingdoms, made a power, solving a problem on which the genius and learning of Swift and the eloquence of Buohe, Grattan and Burke had been wasted, all of these having failed and acknowledged that they could see no way in which success might be achieved. O'Connell's most remarkable gift was neither his eloquence nor his sagacity, but his patience, which from 1800 to 1820 supported him in going from town to town, unaided by the press, planting the seeds of an intelligent and invited patriotism. Then, after many years, after overcoming many difficulties, he forged the enthusiasm of the most excitable of races into one glowing mass. He held it poised in waiting, watching every opportunity, allowing no provocation to stir him to anything harmful to his cause, remembering that "he who commits a crime helps an enemy." And when the time came his country was made to achieve justice for itself, and all without the shedding of a single drop of blood. This wonderful control is incomprehensible. His eloquence was as boundless as the ocean and has never been equalled in modern times. Wendell Phillips in his oration on O'Connell said: "I remember the solemnity of Webster, the grace of Everett, the rhetoric of Choate. I know the eloquence that lay hid in the iron logic of Calhoun. I have melted beneath the magnetism of Sargeant S. Prentiss of Mississippi, who wielded a power few men ever possessed. It has been my fortune to sit at the feet of the great speakers of the English tongue on the other side of the ocean. But I think all of them together never surpassed, and no one of them ever equalled, O'Connell. When I consider O'Connell's personal disinterestedness, his rare, brave fidelity to every cause his principles covered—that clear far-reaching vision and true heart which set him so much ahead of his times, when I see the sobriety and moderation with which he used his measureless powers, and the lofty, generous purpose of his life, I am ready to affirm that he was, all things considered, the greatest man the Irish race ever produced."

But there is one man without mention of whom this sketch would be as worthless as a sketch of America's famous sons would be without mention of Washington. One who is completing the noble work of his predecessors, one on whom the eyes of the Irish of the world are turned, and in whom the confidence and trust of Ireland's children in every land are placed, one whose sagacity and brave fidelity have gained for Ireland so much; and Charles Parnell needs no introduction whatever. He is to Ireland what Washington was to America—the great leader—fighting for his country's cause, obtaining little by little the justice for so many years witheld from his countrymen. And ere long, standing proudly before his people, having reached the goal for which he had so long struggled, with Grattan he can proudly say: "I found Ireland on her knees. I have watched over her with paternal solicitude. I have traced her progress from injuries to arms, and from arms to liberty. Spirit of Swift, spirit of Molyneux, your genius has prevailed! Ireland is now a nation. In that I hail her, and bowing in her august presence I say, Esto perpetua!"

WILLIAM J. MCCARTHY.

CLASS HISTORY.

As, before the ship starts upon a voyage the crew must present itself for examination, so, on a certain Friday, toward the last of June, '83, some forty boys and girls might be seen wending their way toward the old town house where it was to be ascertained who were fitted to be shipped for the three years' voyage.

They came from west, east, south and north; some confident, others despondent.

Do you, who are engaged in your various pursuits in the square below us, ever give a thought to the ordeal which is being passed upon the summit of the sand bank? Do you remember a time when you too, perhaps, endured such a trial?

The examination ended, the committee in solemn conclave assembled, passed sentence upon the papers and the more fortunate portion of the candidates received certificates.

Thirty-two successful applicants met again about the first of the following September with Mr. Bergen, Miss Richardson and Miss Osborn to guide and instruct us in our new duties.

Probably we all, bashful novices as we were, distinctly remember that first day when, having stated our names and ages and ascertained the necessary outfit to obtain, we were told to present ourselves at eight o'clock the following morning, prepared to embark on the year's work.

Not all having the same tastes, we naturally separated, some twenty preferring to visit the classical shores, while the remainder of us were content with our own.

Before the first half of the year had passed, however, some becoming disgusted with foreign customs and language, returned with pleasure to the English division.

Algebra was commenced with Miss Richardson, who puzzled our brains with the unknown quantities x, y & z. Gradually these grew more interesting when suddenly a rumor was spread that our teacher would soon leave us and another would succeed to her place. This was sad news, for we had become greatly attached to her, short as was her stay. Then came Miss Noyes, and we shall always remember how patient she was when we were slow to understand, and the many pleasant hours spent under her guidance.

Who of the class does not recall the time when our teacher thought that it would be instructive for us to see the position of the organs in some animal which could be easily obtained? The lot fell to a cat, and we shall always remember that day when the subject was placed on the table and dissected. Let not Carrie's bravery in holding poor kitty's paw during the operation be forgotten.

Our principal thought it necessary that we should have some drill in composition—writing and in giving declamations or readings, so, early in the term, it was announced that on the following Friday the Junior class would be expected to give readings at the rhetorical exercises. All heard this but did not obey, as was shown on the appointed day when each member of the class was called on and all answered in the negative except Edith. This was not pleasing to our teacher, and we had the privilege of coming to school one afternoon to carry out an elaborate program consisting of miscellaneous readings.

After the first twenty weeks had passed come written examinations, which to most of us proved a slow form of torture.

Leaving Physiology behind, we next attacked Philosophy. Although our teacher tried to interest us in the subject, yet it must be confessed that we were not so zealous as we might have been, perhaps, because our book was an old fashioned affair.

A general characteristic of scholars is their fondness for whispering, and our class was no exception to the rule. Our teachers finally decided that, if whisper we would, the time wasted by indulging in this pastime must be redeemed: so, occasionally we would have fifty extra problems in Algebra, or something equivalent. We always felt that we had had to "pay dear for our whistle."

Many pleasant times that year were had in the dressing-room.

How often there were little meetings held there, sometimes discussing school affairs, but oftener events occurring outside. These meetings were generally of short duration, as scholars would be missed, or the interest of the meeting would be so great that some disturbance would be made, then quickly there might be an addition to our meeting in the person of our principal, who would immediately move that the meeting adjourn until recess; the motion was always adopted.

In looking over the attendance roll of the year we find that several are missing. Among them Frank Robson, always so quiet and demure. He may frequently be seen with a mail bag on his shoulder going to or from the Post Office in a city not many miles from Peabody. Ryan also took his departure during the year. He was especially noted for his famous declamation in defence of Butler. Fifield and Putnam, also left before the end of the year. McFarlane was reckoned in the list, and we have heard that he is acting as "printer's devil" in the office of one of our weekly papers. We often wonder if he has ever eaten any dinners in captivity since he left school. Lyons now has an opportunity to study the science of heat in a practical way in the thermometer factory on the square.

Summer approached, our first school year drew to its close, and the time was enjoyed very much, perhaps too much to be as profitable as it should have been.

Our summer vacation passed, we began on another year. As we approached the school building we thought that it had not changed much during the vacation, but as we entered we found that great improvements had been made.

Many new scholars came to begin their first year, and we realized that we were no longer juniors but middlers. One of the new scholars who came was Percy, who became a valuable addition to our class.

But one change of teachers has taken place, Miss Osborn having retired and been succeeded by Miss Wiley.

Not all who began Geometry continued the study through the year, but those who remained in the class found the study very pleasant, made especially so by our teacher Miss Noyes, who never wearied in explaining any number of times until we understood, and I fear that we were sometimes dull. It happened to be our good fortune to have some brilliant scholars in this class. Burbeck, for instance, who always had some original way of doing things.

Miss Wiley was our teacher in Roman History, and all the scholars who tried to make good progress appreciated the good teaching which we had.

We do not know whether Wallace's dislike for history hastened his departure or not, however, during the history period he disappeared and has not been seen at school since. Sheehan, Jerry McCarthy and Keefe had vanished from our midst still earlier.

Soon after the mid-year examinations another of our classmates was missed from the school building, although he sometimes came across the street to play a game of polo with the boys.

Botany was taken by the English scholars and was enjoyed by all very much, especially the analyzing of the flowers which Harry and Ernest always kept on hand. Our teacher thought that it would be profitable for the scholars to take walks in search of flowers so that we might be able to examine the roots better. The first two walks that were taken were on rainy afternoons. Although we got quite wet we had an enjoyable time. On one of these occasions George was very much surprised to learn a fact which probably he has not yet forgotten, that Ranunculus bulbosus is a buttercup.

Early in the spring an order was issued by the school committee, forbidding the pupils of the Peabody High School to go across the railroad track on Central street during school unless a note requesting permission to do so was brought from home. We always thought the reason for this was the remarkable behavior of some of the scholars while taking their recess on the Square.

Late in the year Clothey dropped out; we expected in a short time to hear of him as a champion polo-player, but we were doomed to disappointment, as the last reports say that he has turned glue-maker.

As the weather became warmer our principal advised that the girls should get some out-of-door game for recesses; so one of our girls appointed a meeting on the front door steps, and it was decided to buy a croquet set, which was obtained and some quite enjoyable games were played.

Often we would hear through the open windows, a man loudly proclaiming the fruits which he had for sale, and sometimes he would sell some to pupils of the High School. Nellie generally did the buying.

The time had passed very rapidly and we found ourselves at the close of another year. The last day of school had come and we were to have oral examinations. There were two girls who thought that they did not wish to be present while the Science of Government class was being examined, and so availed themselves of the first opportunity to leave the room. The class was called, the girls were missed a search was made, and Grace and Edith were found and had a private examination before committee and teacher.

School closed and we looked back upon a profitable year, and one in which we also enjoyed many pleasant times.

September soon came again and scholars could be seen going toward Stevens street. As they approach the familiar building they observe that it has received a coat of paint which adds very much to its outside appearance.

Of course we are all anxious to see our old classmates and to know if all are coming back to finish this wonderful Senior year upon which we are to enter.

The bell rings for school to begin, and all the old scholars are requested to take the seats which they occupied the preceding year. About the first thing we notice a vacant front seat formerly occupied by George Drown. From this we conclude that he is not to return. He is now in a Dry Goods store and we expect him to become a very able clerk.

Farrington is also missing; he was always very quiet, especially in the History class and was famous for his humorous declamations.

Bailey, too, did not return; we see him quite frequently on a grocery wagon.

At first we hardly realized that we were dignified Seniors, as several of the graduates of the preceding year had returned to enter the advanced course, but soon we grew accustomed to our new position.

Carrie came back for a little while then

THE
GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE
For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of
B. LAURANCE'S
Axis Cut Pebbles.

The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name, it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in free-stone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. A. C. P. and can only be purchased from left to learn the dress-maker's trade. She is not practising her vocation now.

Fannie was obliged to leave school on account of ill health; she was noted for the many luncheons which she furnished at recesses when we were apt to be hungry.

As time went by we were surprised to learn that Osborn was to take a trip to California. He concluded, however, not to remain there, as some attraction at home was to great for him to resist.

Quint at length began to lose his great enthusiasm for school and at last left. His interest had gone in another direction, as he had begun to take lessons in Boston on the violin, and we expected that in a short time he would be a celebrated player, but before very long he, like George, became a clerk in a Dry Goods store.

We were sorry to learn that Harry would be unable to finish the year with us. He was always very accommodating in playing for scholars who had forgotten their music.

Our class had gradually diminished, until we had only a baker's dozen left. But Edith through illness was obliged to leave. In losing her we have lost the source of our fun, for some one has said of her, "wherever there was any fun, Edith was always there."

The English Division thought themselves very fortunate in being allowed to take The Outline History of the World instead of Trigonometry, the last twenty weeks. Miss Rollins taught the class during her stay and all felt sorry when she went.

Our teachers have endeavored to make this a profitable as well as a pleasant year. The studies have been made very interesting, although in some we have experienced more difficulty than in others.

The knowledge gained and the influence which has been exerted on our minds during this our last year will undoubtedly be most helpful in the life which is before us of any year which we have spent in school.

Our three years' work has ended, and we are no longer classmates at school. The time has passed very pleasantly and I think all the class will say that their joys have been many and their sorrows few. May each member of the class have in the work of life which is to come find friends and instructors as faithful as have been our many teachers during our three years in the Peabody High School.

JENNIE GOLDTHWAITE.

HELEN OF TROY.

It is said that beautiful women have made most of the trouble in the world from the time of Eve down to the present day; but if we leave out our first mother, perhaps none of them has had the credit of bringing disaster to so many nations, as the famous Helen of Troy, who lived in the days of the Judges of Israel, perhaps twelve, perhaps fourteen centuries before the Christian Era.

She was said to be the most beautiful woman in the world, and the Greek painter, Zeuxis, in the fifth century B. C., painted a picture of her for which he had as his models the five fairest maidens of Croton. As we learn from Virgil and Homer, she was the wife of Menelaus, King of Sparta, and had been sought by numerous suitors. Venus selected her to be the wife of Paris as a reward for the favor that he did her. Paris was one of the sons of Priam, King of Troy, and at birth he was exposed to perish in the forests of Mount Ida, on account of a prophecy that he would bring destruction to the land of Troy; but he was preserved and lived as a shepherd in the mountains, and here he was visited by the three goddesses, Juno, Minerva, and Venus, among whom a quarrel arose as to who was the fairest.

Paris was chosen to settle the dispute and was offered a bribe by each of the goddesses to induce him to decide in her favor. Juno promised him power and riches; Minerva, great wisdom, and Venus, the most beautiful of women for his bride.

Paris decided in favor of Venus, thus making Juno and Minerva his enemies, and the enemies of Troy. Not long after this, by the direction of Venus, he came to Sparta, where he was welcomed by the King, Menelaus, ignorant of what disaster was to befall him, and remained there a long time. At last he persuaded Helen to go with him and carried her off to Troy; this was the cause of the great war between the Greeks and Trojans, which lasted ten years and ended with the destruction of the sacred city. Menelaus called together the Grecian chiefs and persuaded them to aid him to recover his wife; and under the command of Agamemnon, they set sail from Greece to avenge his wrongs. The war lasted without decisive results for nine years with great loss to both sides.

During this time Helen repented of her folly, on account of the great disaster which she had brought upon both nations, since she was now hated both by the Greeks and Trojans:

> "For no kind eye in Troy on Helen rests,
> But who beholds me shudders and detests."

We have a picture of her in the Iliad watching from the wall of Troy the hostile armies on the plain before the city By the side of the double gate, upon Ilium's Great Tower, sat Priam, the seven elders of the city, and Hêlen, to survey the Trojan and Achæan armies who were about to let the war be decided by a single combat between Paris and Menelaus:

> "Attending there on aged Priam, sat
> The elders of the city:
> All these were gathered at the Scæan gate,
> Helen they saw, as to tower she came."

During the war fell Hector, the bravest of the sons of Priam, Sarpedon, Paris himself, and other illustrious Trojans, and Achilles the bravest of the Greeks. At last the Greeks, becoming discouraged, resolved to resort to a stratagem; they pretended to leave Troy, to abandon the long war and to return to Greece; but they only withdrew to Tenedos, an island near by, leaving a wooden horse in which chosen warriors were hidden, and spreading the report that it was an offering to Minerva, whom they had offended; the Trojans rejoicing after their long grief, admire the horse and urge that it be brought into the city, thoughtless of the craft of the Greeks.

Laocoon, a priest of Neptune, fearing some stratagem of the Greeks and mindful of their wiles, protests against receiving it into the city; but Laocoon and his two sons are destroyed by monstrous serpents, who come over the sea and are believed to have been sent by the gods to punish such impiety; the horse is brought with rejoicing inside the gates, and at night the leaders of the Greeks concealed within its sides, are released and set fire to the sacred city.

The Trojans take arms; the palace of Priam is attacked, and Priam is slain by Pyrrhus; the city is seen in flames. On the night of the fall of Troy, Menelaus recovered possession of his fickle queen; at first he thought to slay her in revenge for his country's misfortunes, but her beauty, and the fact that she had several times secretly aided the Greeks during the siege prevailed upon him, and they were among the first to leave the shores of Troy for their native land.

The displeasure of the gods drove them to various coasts, and they were cast upon the shores of Egypt and Cyprus. Helen reached Sparta at length, however, and reigned with Menelaus for a long time in greater prosperity than she deserved.

Dr. Schliemann's late discoveries in Asia Minor lead him to believe that the Troy which we have been reading about in Virgil really existed; and perhaps Helen's beauty and fickleness are not all a fable. During his three years' explorations in Asia Minor, he excavated some buildings, one of which on account of its position on an artificial hill, together with its solid structure in comparison with the other buildings, and the treasure which was found near it, he believes to be the palace of Priam.

Here, then, Helen passed the ten years of the famous siege; this treasure some one started to carry off in a wooden chest, whose key is found near by, but he dropped it and perhaps himself perished in the flame. The chest was found buried under five feet of ashes, and contains gold and silver cups, and copper shields and vessels. In a large silver vase which was standing upright, were found two gold diadems, 60 gold earrings, 8750 gold rings, 6 gold bracelets and numerous other ornaments. We wonder whether any of these were ever worn by the Grecian queen; she certainly was fond of jewelry:

> "For off were flung the adornments of her head,
> The net, the fillet, and the woven band,
> The nuptial veil by golden Venus given."

If they belonged to her, she must have had slender hands, for the bracelets are said to be so small that a girl of ten would have difficulty in putting them on That Troy was destroyed by fire is attested by the ashes with which everything is covered, the welding together of the metal relics; and the many skeletons with helmets found in the debris.

As we learn from Homer that corpses were burned and their ashes preserved in urns, these things prove that it was destroyed by fire.

The standard of beauty varies in different ages, and as some one has said, perhaps if Helen were to appear among us now, and claim the homage which she used to receive, she would be voted "a perfect fright." No doubt, we should think, we could find as great beauty among our modern Helens, though nations no longer go to war about them.

KATIE KEEFE.

OUR EARLY ENGLISH HOMES.

No nation can trace its political history back more than 2500 years. A nation rises into power for a time then falls before some greater one and finally passes away from remembrance, leaving to future generations only relics of its former glory.

The founding of the Roman Empire is known only by traditions which are mixed up with stories of gods and heroes, and the history of Greece is lost in the regions of mythology and fable from which it emerges only in the sixth century B. C. As we study the history of the world and think of the changes which are made by a few hundred years, we can almost look forward in imagination to the time when England too shall have passed away, and see the picture prophetically drawn by Macaulay, when the traveller from New Zealand shall stop to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's, and the solitary fisherman shall spread his nets on the broken arches of London bridge.

The situation of England cut off as she is from the mainland prevented her from being known until comparatively recent times. How the purely fabulous was mingled with men's knowledge of the island, even so late as the sixth century, may be seen from the stories told by an able historian of Constantinople. "There was one part of the island" Procopius said, "where the ground was covered with serpents, and the air was such that no man could breathe it and live. To this desolate place the souls of the departed were ferried over from the land of the Franks at midnight by a strange race of fishermen, who heard the speech of their passengers but could not see their forms."

Taine gives this description of the England to which the Saxons came in the fifth century: "A rude and foggy land like their own, except in the depth of its sea and the safety of its coasts, which one day will call up real fleets and mighty vessels; green England, the word rises to the lips and expresses all. Here, also, moisture pervades everything; even in summer the mist rises; even on clear days you perceive it fresh from the great sea-girdle or rising from vast but ever slushy moorlands, undulating with hill and dale, intersected with hedges to the limits of the horizon. I thought when I saw it of the ancient Saxons, wanderers from West and North who came to settle in this land of marsh and fog, on the border of these primeval forests, on the banks of these great muddy streams which roil down their slime to meet the waves. Smiling love, sweet poetic dreams, refined and nimble thoughts, are for the happy shores of the Mediterranean. Here the barbarian, ill-housed in his mud hovel, who hears the rain rustling whole days in the oak leaves—what dreams can he have gazing upon his mud pools and his sombre sky?"

To this land came the Saxons, from the low marshy coasts of Holland and the forests of Germany. They were large fierce men, with blue eyes, flaxen hair and long beards. In war they were cruel and barbarous. A coward among them was despised and put to death, and in Germany one who had fled in battle was drowned in the mud. Each man was independent and had his own house and grounds apart from others. They had a great love of home and would sleep all day by their firesides after having eaten and drank their fill.

These people were deeply religious and their poetry is full of reverence and meditations upon death and the hereafter. They believed in an invisible being present in all nature, who could not be perceived by the senses. They thought that the world was a continual warfare, and that the greatest excellence which could be attained was true heroism. After death they were to spend all their time in fighting and feasting in Valhalla, the great hall of Odin, where he entertains his chosen heroes. They received Christianity with readiness when it was preached to them and monasteries soon grew up on English soil.

The houses of the common people were built of lath and plaster with a thatched roof. There were no chimneys, nothing but holes in the roof, through which the smoke might escape if so minded. The floor was the bare ground, the beds bundles of straw on the floor with a log of wood for a pillow, and only a coarse coverlet. There were very few dishes and those were of wood.

The richer Saxons had large houses and more pretence of comfort. The principal room was the large hall with a great fireplace at each end. The floor was of earth mixed with lime and trodden down hard. The upper end of the hall was raised by a platform or dais, covered with a canopy as a protection from the weather, for the rest of the hall had no

For Young or Delicate Children.

A Sure Preventive of Cholera Infantum.

It has been the positive means of saving many lives, having been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

Its basis is SUGAR OF MILK, the most important element of mothers milk. It contains no unchanged starch and no Cane Sugar, and therefore does not cause sour stomach, irritation, or irregular bowels.

For Infants deprived of mother's milk, or when weaning, it is unequalled.

For Invalids, either in chronic or acute diseases, it restores digestion, and builds up the strength. It is

TWO REASONS for bi-ennial sessions of the Legislature have become manifest during the present year. One is the length of the session — almost the longest on record—the other the vote of the members increasing their pay.

For whatever reason the session of the present Legislature has become so lengthened out, it is time to have a change. One potent reason, we anticipate, has beenthe non-attendance of members. We are informed that the "stay-a-ways" were numerous, and that it has often been difficult to obtain a quorum. Is this what we elect our legislators for, to obstruct the public business by absence? In such a case a prolonged absence would be a salutary lesson. The business of the State should have been finished before this, and would have been, had the members attended to their duty.

Then, after the delay and non-attendance has made the session longer than was necessary, our Legislators vote themselves a larger salary. The members of the Legislature should have sufficient salary to compensate them for their services. But most of them do not find the office any detriment to their regular business—or at all events they do not allow it to become so. So that it would seem that the present salary was ample.

Annual sessions of the Legislature, be they as long as this year, make politics profitable as a business. There is more law on our statute books to-day than can be enforced or understood. If this State followed the example of the rest of the Union, and adopted bi-ennials, we believe it would be a saving financially to the State and a wise thing for its people. These two circumstances we have mentioned will hasten the progress of the bi-ennial sentiment. The people will see that their money is being needlessly wasted. They will see that Massachusetts does not require so much law that she must, with one other State, be the only exception to the rule of bi-ennial sessions of the Legislature which prevails throughout the entire United States.

IF THE project for the re-arrangement of Senatorial districts is as feasible in the remainder of the county of Essex as it is in the district to which Peabody belongs we shall certainly want to vote a medal to the committee who arranged the scheme. If any town or any place should be connected with the city of Salem in a Senatorial district it is Peabody. Our interests and those of Salem are identical. Our business is principally the same. The leather industry of Salem and Peabody is one; some firms do business in both places, and in every way we are closely connected. We are so nearly a suburb of Salem that it is impossible for a stranger to tell where Salem leaves off and Peabody begins. Much more are our interests identical than are those of Beverly and Salem.

To tack Peabody on to a district composed of a few wards of Lynn, Danvers, Groveland, Georgetown, North Andover and a few such towns is ridiculous. A senator should represent a district where there is community of interest, as nearly as possible. This would not be the case in a leather town like Peabody with the rest of the district largely a farming population. We are glad some of the committee dissented from the report and we suppose we have got to be satisfied. But not a paper in the county, that we have seen, has approved of the arrangement. The people certainly were not consulted, nor any attempt made to ascertain their wishes.

CLASS OF '86.

"IN NOBIS VICTORIA."

Graduating Exercises in Town Hall.

The Class of '86 bade farewell to school cares and duties this afternoon, and again the spacious hall was crowded with the friends of the school and the scholars. As has been the custom of this paper in former years, we have printed verbatim from advance sheets the essays of the class. We give most of the space of this edition to these exercises, so that any extended comments upon the parts as rendered by the young ladies and gentlemen appear needless. Our readers can peruse in a single paper ALL the original essays. They can scan at their leisure the class history and salutatory, and those who are able can read the valedictory. These exercises in the Town Hall are interesting to the graduates and their friends, but too many of them, however brilliant, become monotonous, and we are glad to learn that it is the intention after this year to dispense with some of them. All the graduates will not be expected to take parts. In fact they will only be assigned to a portion of the class—according to their scholarship. This will reduce the length of time occupied in the Town Hall and will be more satisfactory to the class itself and the audience.

The exercises began with a piano duet by Misses Patterson and Tigh, after which Miss Percy Grosvenor, in a clear and distinct manner, delivered the Salutatory and essay on Ballads and Ballad-Singers as follows:

As we gather here to-day for the last time, our thoughts are more of parting than of welcome, for we who have been so closely connected in each other's thoughts, separate to-day perhaps never again to be thrown together in a work so dear and common to us all. Yet we do welcome our friends who come here to-day, those friends who really sympathize with us and take an interest in our success, and we hope that interest will not leave us here but will remain with us through life. We trust that your criticisms may not be too harsh, but that you will rather try to overlook our many faults, the result of inexperience.

We are glad of this opportunity to welcome our schoolmates of the other classes, for you, who are following so closely behind, will find almost before you are aware of it, that you are ready to take your places here. Ambitious Middlers and enterprising Juniors, we wish you all possible success. You Middlers will find when you return to school in the fall, that you no longer retain your old names, but must now be considered as wise and grave Seniors. And you Juniors will then find that your positions are fully established, and you need no longer feel that you hold the lowest places. We earnestly entreat you all to prepare yourselves so perfectly that you may do credit to yourselves and teachers when you come to fill our positions here.

BALLADS AND BALLAD-SINGERS.

Some one has said: "Let me make the songs of a people and I care not who make its laws."

What has influenced armies or stirred the feelings of the people more than the songs which were sung or written during wars? Did not the Normans spend the night before the battle of Hastings in singing hymns? Did not "La Marsellaise" stir all the hearts of the French to a revolution? Are there not those here to-day who remember how their pulse bounded on hearing "John Brown" sung by our soldiers as they marched south in '61? And the songs sung at our firesides: How their influence remains with us?

The literature of England and of most of the countries of northern Europe during the middle ages lay almost wholly in the hands of the minstrels and monks. The monk spent the greater part of his time in his dimly lit cell, penning words of theology or useless logic. Between these brotherhoods there was not the least love. The minstrels, who sang in the halls of the nobles, songs, either of their own composition or transmitted to them from past generations, often aimed sly and terrible blows at monkery. Their songs drew out the long hoarded money of the nobles who so reluctantly doled it out to the church. Consequently the cloister doors were closed to the wandering minstrel. On cold winter evenings, after the day's hunt was over and the family were gathered around the fire, the minstrel was a welcome guest. He sang the songs of heroic ancestors in a way which touched the very hearts of his hearers.

The minstrel was often the attendant of some nobleman whose arms he wore suspended from his neck. An interesting description is given of one of these, who took part in the pageant during the visit of Queen Elizabeth at Kenilworth. He wore a garb of Kendal green, with long sleeves which fell to the middle of the leg, and a ruff well set out by setting sticks, which took the place of starch, surrounded his neck His head was shaven and bare and his boots were finely cleaned with soot.

A death blow was rendered to the calling of the ballad-singers by an act of Elizabeth passed in 1597, including all wandering minstrels under the names of rogues and vagabonds. Cromwell, at a later period, inflicted severe punishment upon all fiddlers and roaming singers.

The simple ballads of the fifteenth century, which were the delight of the common people, cannot fail to please such readers as are not disqualified for their enjoyment by a false standard. All people have hearts and any song which touches the heart of a peasant cannot fail to awake a responsive chord in that of the most refined. Moliere, while writing his plays, used to read them first to his housekeeper by her fireside, and he always found that he had the same success on the stage as he had in his own home, for the people seldom failed to laugh or weep where this old woman did.

Songs which the common people love will endure trial by the rules of criticism. Addison applied the same rules to the "Ballad of Chevy-Chase," by which the Iliad and Aeneid are judged, and it stood the test. "Chevy-Chase" is one of the most popular among old English ballads. Ben Johnson said that he would rather be its author than the author of all his works. And Sir Philip Sidney declared: "I never hear the old song of Percy and Douglas, but I feel my heart more moved than with a trumpet." This ballad long served to arouse the pride and patriotism of the English people. In the Battle of Chevy-Chase the English are the first to take the field and the last to leave it, they being only fifteen hundred while the Scots have ten thousand. One of the most pathetic passages is that describing the different manner in which the leaders of each army receive the news of the battle and the loss of their chiefs.

The sentiments of this poem are poetical and natural and full of that majestic simplicity which one so admires in the ancient poets. Addison says that if "Chevy-Chase" had been filled with pedantic turns and points of wit, no doubt it would never have attained such popularity by touching the hearts even of the most uneducated.

What can be more natural and poetical with such a resemblance to the simplicity of the ancients than the following lines:

> "The stout earl of Northumberland
> A vow to God did make;
> His pleasure in the Scotish woods
> Three summer days to take."

If this had been written in the Gothic manner which pleases so many readers of our day, it would have failed to interest so many centuries.

As we come down to later times in the history of our literature, we find the same prominence given to the ballads. The songs found in the plays of Shakespeare and other dramatists were the most popular of their works. The early ballads are always associated in our minds with the picturesque presence of a minstrel or with some Lady Heron rising to tune her harp in the court of King James, but they have also been sung on the stage and are still favorites with the audiences of the opera.

The slave songs of the South will always remain popular, for they proceed from the very hearts of the negroes. As literature is only the reflection of the thoughts of the people, why should not these songs be dear to those who felt so deeply interested in their freedom. Such songs as "Nellie Gray" and "Way down upon the Swanee River" have become a part of our literature.

It is the belief of some that poetry is dying out, that it belongs to a primitive age, when feeling was more prominent than reflection, and that we shall have no more great poets. It is true that the present century seems to be given over to prose more than any of its predecessors, but the calling of the bard is still held in reverence, and so long as men have hearts to feel, song will be their natural expression.

The remainder of the programme was then proceeded with in the order assigned.

CLASS ODE.

Oh, happy are our hearts to-day,
And gaily sing we songs of glee;
For life with all its brave array
Is stretched before us endlessly.

Now, let us ask the Father's aid,
Who guides the erring feet aright.
That we may walk through sun and shade
Upheld by His all-pow'rful might.

And when the race of life is run,
Oh, then may we all meet above;
And may it be we all have done
Kind acts and gen'rous deeds of love.

Arthur F. Brown, Mackenzie's 19th Century.

The stage was very elaborately trimmed with ferns and flowers and potted plants. Around the front of the stage following the footlights was a row of ferns surmounted with white laurel. In the rear were bouquets and potted plants. A large piece made of roses and a variety of brightly colored flowers was on the right, while on the left was a large bank of green with the letters 1886 in white, the whole surmounted with a floral horseshoe. The effect was very beautiful and reflects much credit on the scholars of the class and their teachers.

The valedictory address was as follows:

LABOR.

Quaecumque fortuna et disciplina ulli sint, seu dives sit seu pauper, seu validus seu invalidus, seu eruditus seu indoctus, si ardet utilis esse et si tantum faciat quantum possit, amplus laboris ager ei expandat. Omnes in hoc sedulo mundo occasiones utilitatis habent; et fideles nobilesque sunt qui eas arripiant.

Decet praecipue nos disserere de labore. Curriculum nostrum confectum est. Orbem laborum activorum mox incipiemus. Deliberata re ineamus illum laborem, quam maxime possumus, cui natura accommodati sumus; nam dilectus labor animum tenet et quae effici non posse videntur, ea a nobis saepe efficiuntur "Possumus quia posse videmur." De inconstantia et vacuis consiliis juvenes saepe reprehendimur. "Aestum in rebus humanis," dum licet, capere dubitamus; aestus minuit; aureum horae momentum fugit; serius occasionem amissam videmus. Forsitan, futuram dignitatem animo concipientes, expectamus otium quo magna opera perficiamus. Vita brevior est quam ut inania captet. Praeclarus pictor dicebat, "Nulla via ad res secundas est, nisi diem de die laborare." Nonne meministis dicti Lutheri qui plenus negotiorum librum divinum tamen interpretatus est? Hoc est, "Nulla dies sine linea." Quam magna ejus vita! Putemus momenta quae vacua negotiis sint, gemmas, quae tantum postulant collegi ut pulchrum horae monile faciant. Collocate momenta et omnia ita proficite. Duo genera opificum sunt. Unum genus est eorum qui sua ipsorum causa ad rem optabilem nituntur pervenire. Auxiliantur neminem potestate acquisita. Alterum genus est eorum qui non pro se sed pro aliis operantur. Hi fortes magnas conditiones quas vita habeat saepe excludunt, et, dilecto opere se avertentes, modesta officia diem ex die perficiunt; nobilem vitam non nimium sui amantes hi agunt; sed quam refertae dulci humanitate eorum vitae fuerint, nos indomita ambitione non videmus donec eorum manus ab opere quieverint. Vita officiosa assimilis operi tesselato quo prismaticae partes conjunctae perfectum unum faciunt. Talis vita assimilis pulchrae picturae aut inspiranti carmini, memoriae quorum se dant animo ut strenuam praestare operam nos incitent et in dolore consolentur. Verbum officium auribus juvenum male sonat; multi opinamur officiosam vitam assimilem albenti caelo esse, valde placidam et insulsam. At vero album caelum apricum diem promittit, et quum nubes revolutae erunt et "consolatio magni mundi," ingens sol diem coruscam circumfuderit album caelum obruetur. Ita est de officiis. Quum Magnus Dominus, opus quod facere conati sumus laudaverit, omnes dolores et res molestae ex memoria discedent. Unus clarissimorum prope finem vitae dixit, "Ea quae effeci, patiens laboris effeci." Patientia laboris! est vera causa successus. "Labor est ingenium quod vincit." Aetate progressionis vivimus; mundus opificibus qui habent sedulas manus mentesque repletus est. Ut ex sententia succedamus, virtus, fiducia, constantia, exercitandae sunt. Magni opifices praemia magna referunt. Vacua simulatio laboris non est satis his diebus sedulis. Necesse est nos esse assiduos, pertinaces, diligentes, amore nostri laboris ardentes. At vero, aliquis dicat, "Non elegi hoc opus; officium id mihi imposuit, penitus injucundum mihi est." Sed immisce te tuo labori; exquire quo modo opus cotidianum amplifices. Brevi tempore non officium sed delectatio erit. "Honestus labor habet os venustum." Minima per opus fidum negotia efferuntur. Magni eventus ex patiente labore solo sequuntur. Aliquando rationem factorum reddemus. Vita brevis est ad summum et nimium cito umbrae appropinquabunt et nox vitae veniet in qua nemo potest operari.

Cari amici, tempus instat ad separandum. Laeti hanc horam anticipabamus, attamen valedicere quosdam doloris sensus movet. Dies in schola una cum omnibus occasionibus conteruntur. Praeterita non possumus mutare; futura, tamen, nobis praejacent. Licet nobis ut aut vitam ignavam aut vitam occupatam et repletam nobili labore sequamur. Quae vita nobis erit? Deus hanc esse concedat. Vobis, carus praeceptor et carae praeceptores, qui patientes nostrae stupiditatis, laudentes conata celsa, nos in via doctrinae duxistis, qui nos probitatis, perseverantiae, diligentiae principia acquire docuistis, gratias habemus, vobis gratias habemus.

Testificationem omnibus cum schola connexis exprimamus, quorum assidua benignitas per hos annos nobis maxime adjuvavit. Memoriae vestri omnium nobis gratae semper erunt. Vobis, nostris amicis hic conventis pro vestra amicitia ac audientia gratias summas agimus et vobis valedicimus.

Mr. Oliver Poland, one of our old and respected citizens, died at his home on Sewall street, last Friday after a brief sickness, although he has not enjoyed very robust health for a number of years. He was stricken with paralysis June 9th from which he never rallied. He was a native of Hamilton, and was 80 years 10 months 17 days old. Mr. Poland was a wheelwright by trade, and for years followed that industry. He was a member of the South church and held the respect of the whole community. His funeral took place from his late residence last Monday.

At a monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Veterinary Association at the Massasoit house, Springfield, last Wednesday evening, Dr. J. F. Winchester of the Massachusetts cattle commission, son of C. F. Winchester of this town, was present and exhibited diseased tissues from each of the eight glandered horses belonging to the Cambridge street railway which the Commissioners ordered killed last April. The next meeting will be held in Boston, September 22.

The following officers of the Band of Hope have been elected for three months;—Superintendent, Miss M. J. Floyd; President, Minnie McNeal; Secretary, Jennie Strout; Treasurer, Henry Melcher; Vice Presidents, Violet Montreuil, Fred Bachder, Grace Bragdon; Librarian, Lillie Allen; Assistant Librarian, Addie Pierce; Collector, Arthur McNeal; Organist, Mary Dockham; Entertainment Committee, Addie Pierce, Fannie Jones, Lottie Davis and Mary Dockham.

Last Thursday evening a society to be known as the Oxford League was organized at the Methodist parsonage. The following officers were elected:—President, Mrs. George A. Phinney; Vice President, William H. Emerson; Secretary, Miss Jennie Goldthwait; Treasurer, George Drown; Executive Committee—Miss Annie Lynch, Mrs. W. H. Emerson, Mrs. George A. Phinney, Frank Hoag. The meetings will be held weekly.

At a regular meeting of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. held last Tuesday evening the following officers were elected: N. G., John K. Saunders; V. G., Daniel F. Buxton; Rec. Sec., Eben I. Kimball; Treas., Geo. F. Sanger. The past grands were also elected to the Grand Lodge. The elected and appointed officers will probably be installed next Tuesday evening and refreshments will be furnished at town hall.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. Sylvanus L. Newhall exhibited a beautiful specimen of the night blooming cereus at the Bank, Friday. It was from the greenhouse of his brother, O. F. Newhall, at South Peabody.

A farm hand named Cronin had a little unpleasant experience last Saturday. He had been using Paris Green, and in mixing it with water he used his hand to scoop it up with. A short time afterwards he went to a pump and attempted to drink with the use of his hands instead of the dipper. His hands being flavored with the poison, it was soon necessary to secure medical aid, and in a short time all danger was passed.

Messrs. Needham and Parker, who were injured by the explosion June 17, are out again, but their faces show of the powder.

W. J. LEFAVOUR, Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to be able to endorse the Ivers & Pond piano. In resonance, volubility, firmness and purity of tone it will compare favorably with any piano made in the country. I heartily recommend it to the public and my friends who are intending to purchase. Yours truly, C. R. Bill, teacher of music in public schools.

A good motto for business men: "Charge for no risk and take none." Paine's Furniture Company, of Boston, the largest concern in their line of business in this country, have acted on this motto for years and find it a great success.

Thursday Evening, July 1, 1886,

Where Hours go Merrily.

Jordan Lodge of Masons held a special meetieg last Wednesday, and the work was performed on two candidates. A delagation of visiting Masons were present from Woburn and Salem. At the close of the meeting they adjourned to the town hall and partook of refreshments furnished by Janitor Patterson, after which there was speech making.

The Old Ladies Home Aux. Society had a poor day last Wednesday for their lawn party at Sontaug Lake, owing to the rain. Notwithstanding this, there were upwards of 200 people present, and they enjoyed themselves. Supper was served on the piazza of Lynnfield Hotel and there was dancing, with music by the Salem Cadet Orchestra. The company returned at an early hour by special train. We trust the ladies will try again.

The Leather Manufacturer's Association held its annual dinner and business meeting at Young's Hotel on Wednesday. The following board of officers were elected:—President, Theophilus King; Vice-presidents, L. B. Harrington, A. G. Webster, R. H. Brown; Secretary and Treasurer, G. E. Dustin; Directors, T. E. Proctor, A. P. Greene, Thomas L. Nelson, G. W. Varney, Alvah Evans, F. R. Tuttle, James Skinner, Eustace Cummings, Griffin Place, Franklin Osborne, W. F. Wiley, George H. Poor.

The citizens of Winthrop celebrated the victory obtained by the Winthrop Electric Street Railway Company in obtaining its charter from the state by a band concert and fireworks Saturday night. Several residences were illuminated, and open house was kept in honor of the event.

Childrens' Sunday, or Floral Sunday, was appropriately observed last Sabbath at the Universalist church, the children being present in large numbers to listen to a sermon preached by Rev. Mr. Sprague especially to the young people. The altar was very elaborately and tastefully trimmed, the center piece being a large cross on a massive bank of flowers, surrounded by baskets and bouquets of every material. A basket of choice roses was at each window and a cross in front of the singer's gallery. In the evening a sabbath school concert was given in the church which was very much enjoyed. There was singing by the choir and a quartette consisting of Mrs. Hagar, Miss Ida Farnum, Messrs. Pope and Farrington. Several of the classes sung pieces, and a recitation by Georgie Quint was excellent.

The eight year old son of officer Goodwin celebrated his birthday Monday afternoon by a party to his schoolmates, all had a merry time.

The Peabodys play a game of base ball next Saturday in Amesbury, with the club in that place.

Miss Lizzie Nichols, teacher in the Center school, and Miss Eva Raddin of the same building, took their pupils on a horse car ride to Danvers yesterday.

The infant daughter of A. E. Wells held her first reception last Saturday, and several of her little baby friends were present to enjoy her first anniversary.

At the coming K. of L. picnic at Canobie Lake, N. H., the Salem Brass Band, consisting of twenty pieces, will furnish concerts during the day, and at the square the morning of the picnic. The sports of the day are: Base ball game for a set of medals; dory race, first prize $5, second, $3; three standing jumps, first prize $3, second, $2; 100 yards dash, first prize $3, second, $2, open to members of Peabody assemblies; 150 yards dash, first prize $3, second, $2; running broad jump, first prize $3, second, $2; running hop step and jump, first prize, $3, second, $2, open to all.

The Union Picnic of the Universalist Sunday School Union, Wednesday, July 14, at Centennial Grove, should not be forgotten. There will be music by the Salem Cadet Band, dancing and games. Tickets can be obtained of the teachers of the Sunday School. Cars will leave here at 8.30 A. M.

On Wednesday evening, the members of the first class of the Center School, during a brief absence of their teacher, Mr. Cole, from his home on School street, took possession of his parlor, and, on his return completely surprised him with an elegant engraving, "I'm Lord of All I Survey", handsomely mounted in a gold frame. The picture represents several deer, the central figure being a stately stag, the "Lord" of the mountains over which he gazes. The presentation was made by Master Joseph Trask, who, at the same time, presented a beautiful bouquet. The entire class was present, and spent a very pleasant evening in games and other amusements, closing in a very happy way their last year of grammar school life.

Exhibitions have been given in several classes of the Center School, at all of which a large number of visitors was present. On Monday afternoon in Miss Raddin's room, the 10th class gave recitations and songs. Tuesday afternoon the 8th and 11th classes, Miss Mattie Wilkins' and Miss Chandler's, entertained their friends. From 3 to 4 o'clock of the same day, the three upper classes gave an exhibition in the Hall. Several readings had been prepared, but Dr. Mason of Boston being present the time was given entirely to music. Several pieces were sung under the direction of Prof. Bill, and Dr. Mason tested the class in sight reading, giving exercises in three parts, all of which were well sustained. Miss Mary P. Towne, teacher of the fourth class, Center School, was surprised Thursday morning at finding upon her table an elegant celuloid toilet set in a plush case, a gift from members of her class.

There was a very happy wedding party at St. John's Catholic Church last Tuesday afternoon, the contracting parties being Mr. William J. Croughwell and Miss Mary A. Houghton, daughter of Mr. Richard Houghton. They were the recipients of many beautiful presents, including a dozen each of knives and forks, butter knife and caster presented by the employes at Geo. W. Pepper's, and furnished by Geo. A. Collins & Co., the well known jewelers. The newly married couple have gone on a bridal trip to New York.

A large audience was present at the public exhibition in the Wallis school this morning and a very excellent programme was carried out, including singing by the class, instrumental music, etc. There were readings by Miss Mary Upton, Miss Bella Murray, Miss Eliza Osborn, Miss Mary Clark and Master Martin Green and a paper by Master James Osgood; Master Melcher rendered a violin solo and Master John Teague a harmonica solo in a very creditable manner. There were recitations by Miss Bancroft and Miss Lulu Warner. Piano duets were rendered by Misses Arnold and Grosvenor and piano solos by Miss Spillane, Master Wingate and Miss Clara Foote.

Members of the graduating class at the Wallis school called at the residence of their teacher, Mr. Geo. F. Barnes, last Wednesday afternoon, and left him a present consisting of a beautiful lemonade set in peach blown glass with hammered brass salver, also a stylographic pen and ink stand. Miss Hill of the same school was remembered with a photograph album by her pupils and Miss Jacobs with a standard thermometer. Miss Stratton was also remembered by her pupils.

Miss Carrie Upton of the Center school was presented with a very pretty card receiver by members of her class. Miss Esther R. Perkins received a gold pin from a member of her class.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

The Boston papers of Thursday contained a sensational report of the adventures of Mrs. Benjamin K. Davis of this town, while on a visit to New York. The Herald said:—"Mrs. Davis came to New York on a visit on the 4th of this month. Her three children, aged 6, 8 and 10 years, travelled with her. She went first to the Cosmopolitan hotel, but stayed there only one day and then went to Hoboken, N. J., just across the Hudson, to visit friends. She remained there two weeks, and on last Saturday came back to this city and went to the Vanderbilt hotel. She told the proprietor on going there that she was without money, but she had sent to her husband for a remittance by telegraph, and until that came would leave with him her jewels and jewel case. With this understanding she remained until 6 o'clock Tuesday evening, up to which time the expected answer to her request for money failed to arrive. Thinking that her husband might have sent the message, by a mistake, to the Cosmopolitan hotel, where she first stopped, she, with her three children walked the long distance down town to that house. She waited outside the Cosmopolitan for four hours, sending in that time 14 different requests to know if any message had arrived for her. None came, and at nine o'clock at night she trudged back with her children to the Vanderbilt hotel, and was told that she could not stay any longer without money. Dazed by her trouble, she wandered out into the night, dragging her nearly fainting children after her. At midnight, a policeman trying the doors of the stores on his beat, far from the Vanderbilt Hotel, found Mrs. Davis and her little ones huddled into a sheltering doorway, asleep. He carried them to a station house. There they were given the proper treatment and recovered from the effect of the hardships they had gone through. In the police court, an officer who had been investigating the case reported that the expected remittance from Mr. Davis had arrived, and she was released, and arrived home Thursday afternoon." To those in this town who know Mrs. Davis, her adventure does not seem strange, as her conduct before leaving home was such as to convince them that she was laboring under a slight form of mental aberration She has had similar attacks before and recovered. But it must be said to her credit that a good part of the above is sensational. Mrs. Davis was at the hotel and telegraphed to her husband for money which he immediately sent by telegraph from Salem, and she should have received it within two hours, but it was twenty-six before it was found and then it was in an express office. She was not arraigned in the police court at all.

The report of Chief of police Peasley for the month of June is as follows: Whole number of arrests 31; drunkenness, 18; assault 3; vagrancy 2; affray 2; keeping liquor with intent to sell, 2; using profane language 1; murder 1; maiming 1; maintaining liquor nuisance 1; lodgers 21.

A party of boys did considerable damage at the carriage factory of J. A. Roome, on Foster street, last Thursday night, by smashing in the top of a carryall belonging to Mr. Levi Spaulding, and commiting other depredations.

Word was received by the police last Wednesday, that an attempt had been made to outrage a little girl living on Central street. The little child was at play in front of the house of A. L. Ames, when a man took her in his arms and carried her to the fields in the rear of the house and attempted to outrage her, but was probably frightened before he accomplished his purpose. The underclothing of the child was torn from her, and after she escaped she returned home much exhausted, carrying her clothing in her hand. She told her story as well as she was able, and the neighbors went into the fields to find the fiend but were not successful.

A parlor window was broken in the house of H. L. Whidden on Main street, last Friday evening by a piece of wire used in supporting a young tree in front of the house. It gave the family quite a start.

A five year old child of Thomas Sweeney on Spring street, broke its arm recently while at play near Lloyd's morocco factory.

Some one amused themselves by throwing a brick through the large light of glass in H. M. Osborne's store last Thursday night.

A Peabody lady found a pocket book on Conductor Buxton's car last Saturday, containing $20. A woman who sat near claimed the money and it was given her. It was afterwards found that it was not her property, but belonged to a lady in Beverly.

Mr. Joseph N. Burbeck, the soap manufacturer, met with a painful accident Monday. He was driving from Mr. N. M. Quint's with a hay rake, and in harnessing to it, he neglected to fasten the hitching strap, and the horse became frightened and commenced to kick, striking Mr. Burbeck below the knee. He continued to run, and when he reached the residence of George Wright he jumped over the fence, and Mr. Burbeck was thrown to the ground and trampled upon, and his leg fractured in another place. He was assisted to his home by neighbors, and officers Goodwin & Crowley who were in the vicinity. Drs. Pike and Weston attended him.

Mr. Peter Fegan lost a pocket book recently containing $12 and some papers. Mr. Fegan is a poor man and can ill afford to stand the loss.

A young lady named Tigh had a narrow escape while trying to board the 2 o'clock train last Monday, after it was in motion.

Mr. Henry Tilton, a farm hand, was prostrated last Tuesday evening on Central street as he was attempting to get out of a wagon. He was badly bruised about the face and was taken to Estes' boarding house in an unconscious condition.

The liquor cases of Mrs. Honora Cuddire and Mrs. Catherine Hayes came up in the police court Tuesday. Mrs. Cuddire was fined $100 and costs, and Mrs. Hayes' case was continued a week.

Last Saturday afternoon a load of hay belonging to James P. King was tipped over in front of the flag staff on Lowell street, but striking in the fountain, prevented its being capsized. With the assistance of those who gathered it was soon righted.

Bennie, a young son of Jacob G. Bodge, living on Andover street, accidentally cut off one of his fingers while at play recently.

The police captured two jugs of whiskey at the house of Catherine Hayes on Low street, last Saturday night.

In the police court Monday morning, Jonn Brannigan and Daniel Costello for being drunk were fined $1 and costs each.

If the summer tourtist lacks for information relative to the travel on different lines, it will not be because the railroads have not put such knowledge within their reach. The excursion pamphlets of all the roads are marvels of beauty.

THE BEST

boon ever bestowed upon man is perfect health, and the true way to insure health is to purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Mrs. Eliza A. Clough, 34 Arlington st., Lowell, Mass., writes: "Every winter and spring my family, including myself, use several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Experience has convinced me that, as a powerful purifier, it is very much superior to any other preparation of Sarsaparilla. All persons of scrofulous or consumptive tendencies, and especially delicate children, are sure to be greatly benefited by its use." J. W. Starr, Laconia, Iowa, writes: "For years I was troubled with Scrofulous complaints. I tried several different preparations, which did me little, if any, good. Two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla effected a complete cure. It is my opinion that this medicine is the best blood of the day." C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H., writes: "For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and unable to obtain relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I have taken several bottles, am greatly benefited, and believe it to be the best of blood purifiers." R. Harris, Creel City, Ramsey Co., Dakota, writes: "I have been an intense sufferer, with Dyspepsia, for the past three years. Six months ago I began to use

Blood

Purifier

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

It has effected an entire cure, and I am now as well as ever."

roof except a few boards. Across the platform was a table at which the family and their guests sat at meals. The master and his wife occupied two finely carved armchairs. Along the length of the hall, at right angles to the master's table, ran a long rude table with benches at the sides at which the servants and inferior guests were seated. The room was lighted by torches placed around the walls.

The more refined and courtly Normans introduced many improvements, such as building greatly needed chimneys to the houses. The sleeping conveniences were amended and bedsteads became more common among the poor. Wooden dishes were replaced by those of pewter and tin; knives and spoons became more common, and silver came into use upon the tables of the higher classes. Hangings for the walls were made of silk richly ornamented with birds and flowers in needlework, and specimens of these are greatly admired at the present day. But these did not serve to keep out the cold and wind which came through the wide cracks in the walls.

Scott, after describing the sleeping apartment of Rowena, hung with silken tapestries and furnished with costly couches, says that no modern belle need envy her luxury, for the silken hangings often rustled in the wind and mistress and maid shivered in the draughts.

War and the chase were the only occupations of the Saxon freemen, and the lives of the English ladies must have been very dull during the day when their lords were from home. They had no books to amuse them and could not have read them if they had. The castles of the barons were widely separated and their ladies could find no employment but the direction of their households and sitting at their embroidery with their maids.

The manners of these people could not have been very refined for the time of which we speak is before the date of Chaucer's prioress, who attracted admiration for her elegant table manners, for being able to carry a piece of meat to her mouth without dropping it, and always wiping her lips with a napkin before drinking. Such daintiness was unknown to the Saxons. After supper the wine was passed around, and as the spirits of the company gradually rose, they sang ballads of love and war and made the old hall ring with their shouts and laughter. The English people still retain the character of their ancestors. The Saxon element is seen in the Englishmen of to-day in their love of home, their generosity and hospitality, while the Norman element shows itself in their adherence to laws, their love of rank and refinement. Brave deeds move us now as then, and the same strong affections live among us that bound our rude ancestors to their early English homes.

HELEN W. ROBERTS.

CHARACTER OF JULIUS CÆSAR.

There are few anecdotes of Cæsar's childhood; he was growing up a tall, slight, handsome youth, and very particular about his appearance. In his early life he was an athlete, admirable in all manly exercises especially in riding. He was quiet and gentleman like, with a natural courtesy of high breeding, and was observed to be the truest of friends to avoid quarrels and to be easily appeased when offended.

Cæsar's father had been praetor, but held no higher office. His mother was a daughter of Aurelius Cotta, a strict stately lady of the old school and uninfected by new fashions. She and her husband, or both, were rich, and the habits of the household were simple and severe. To his mother he owed many of his most commanding qualities and throughout her life he treated her with deep affection and respect. In his relations to her we have proof that Cæsar possessed that strong family affection which always accompanies a noble nature and which the nobles of the day have by some writers been supposed to have been without. The connection with Marius indicates the political opinions which prevailed in the family.

In public career Cæsar may be regarded under three aspects: As a politician, a writer and a soldier. Like Cicero, he began his public life at the bar and belonged by birth to the popular party but showed no disposition to plunge into political agitation. Cæsar's aim from first to last was better government and the prevention of bribery. When anything was to be done Cæsar selected the man who was best able to do it, not caring particularly who he was or what he might do in other respects. To his faculty of choosing fit persons to execute his orders may be ascribed the success of his provincial administration, the enthusiasm which was felt for him in the North of Italy and the quietness of Gaul after the conquest. Cicero has said of Cæsar's oratory that he surpassed those who had practised no other art.

Most of his writings are lost, but there remain seven books of commentaries on the War in Gaul and three upon the Civil War, containing an account of its causes and history. In the history of the War in Gaul nothing is written which could be dispensed with and nothing important is left untold. The incidents are set off by delicate and just observations on human character, and the story is rendered attractive by the details of the character and customs of unknown and remarkable people, and shows the attention which Cæsar was always at leisure to bestow on anything which was worthy of interest. The books on the Civil War have the same simplicity and clearness; they contain the history of the Revolution related by the principal actor in it. No effort can be traced to set his own side in a favorable light or abuse or depreciate his adversaries. The facts are left to tell their own story. The Commentaries, as a historical narrative, are far superior to any other Latin composition of the kind, as the person of Cæsar himself stands out among the rest of his contemporaries. Of the lost writings the most to be regretted is the "Anto Cato."

It may be said of Cæsar that he came into the world at a special time and for a special object. He represents the religion of the Roman State as an institution established by the laws, but his own writings contain nothing to indicate that he had any religious belief at all. After a victory he thanked his soldiers but did not order Te Deums to be

AYER'S SUGAR CATHARTIC COATED PILLS CURE

Headache, Nausea, Dizziness, and Drowsiness. They stimulate the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels, to healthy action, assist digestion, and increase the appetite. They combine cathartic, diuretic, and tonic properties of the greatest value, are a purely vegetable compound, and may be taken with perfect safety, either by children or adults. E. L. Thomas, Framingham, Mass., writes: "For a number of years I was subject to violent Headaches, arising from a disordered condition of the stomach and bowels. About a year ago I commenced the use of Ayer's Pills, and have not had a headache since." W. P. Hannah, Gormley P. O., York Co., Ont., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills for the last thirty years, and can safely say that I have never found their equal as a cathartic medicine. I am never without them in my house." C. D. Moore, Elgin, Ill., writes: "Indigestion, Headache, and Loss of Appetite, had so weakened and debilitated my system, that I was obliged to give up work. After being under the doctor's care for two weeks, without getting any relief, I began taking Ayer's Pills. My appetite and strength returned, and I was soon enabled to resume my work, in perfect health."

sung. He fought his battle to establish a tolerable degree of justice in the Government and he succeeded but was murdered.

It was by accident that Cæsar took up the profession of a soldier, yet perhaps no commander ever showed greater military genius. In those days there were no maps, and countries had to be surveyed, routes had to be laid out, and depths and sources of rivers and character of Mountain passes ascertained; men whose nominal duty was to fight were engineers, architects and mechanics. Cæsar was never defeated when personally present except once at Gegoria and once at Durazzo. His greatest successes were due to the rapidity of his movements which brought him upon the enemy before they heard of his approach. In battles he sometimes rode, more often went on foot, in conspicuous dress, that he might be seen and recognized.

By his own effort he recovered a day that was half lost. Once he seized a panic stricken Standard bearer, turned him around and told him he had mistaken the direction of the enemy. He never misled his army as to an enemy's strength, and if he misstated numbers it was only to exaggerate. He was careful of his soldiers, allowing them rest although he allowed none to himself, never exposed his men to unnecessary danger, and scarcely ever fought a battle at a disadvantage. When a gallant action had been performed he knew by whom it had been done, and every soldier, however humble, might feel assured that he would receive praise if he deserved it. No general was ever more loved by his army or had greater power over those who served under him. When the Civil War began and Labienus left him, he told all the officers who served under Pompey that they were free to follow if they wished and not one forsook him. The Gauls paid the expense of the conquest in the prisoners taken in battle who were sold to the slave merchants; this is the only real blot on Cæsar's career, and this is not personally upon him but upon the age in which he lived.

The age in which Cæsar lived was in many respects a counterpart of our own when intellect was trained to the highest point it could reach, and on the great subjects of human interest, on morals and politics, on poetry and art, and when men thought as we think, aspired and struggled after the same objects. It was an age of progress and civilization, of civil liberty and intellectual culture. The highest offices of the state were open to the meanest citizens and confined to those who had the longest purses and the most ready use of the tongue on the popular platform. Italy was being absorbed into vast estates held by a few favored families and cultivated by slaves, while the occupation of the higher class was to obtain money without labor and spend it in enjoyment. The prisoners taken in battle were bought up steadily by contractors who followed in the rear of the Roman armies, and were not ignorant like negroes but trained, useful and often educated men, able to turn their hands to some form of skilled labor, as clerk or mechanics. The wealthy Roman bought slaves by the thousand and employed some in the workshops, in the capital, others they spread over the plantations. With all his wealth there were but two things the Roman noble could buy—political power and luxury, and his whole resources were expended in these directions. The first ambition of a Roman noble was to obtain a province and the road to this lay through the praetor-ship and consulship.

Cæsar gained distinction in the forum with the same ease with which he had gained it in the field. On the death of Metellus he was elected Pontifex Maximus, a signal sign of his popularity which placed him at the head of the state religion; soon after this he was made praetor. In 56 B. C. it was arranged that Cæsar's command in Gaul should be extended five years longer, but by the law of Trebonius it was continued until 49 B. C. In that year the propositions brought by Cicero to the new Consuls were rejected and Cæsar was ordered to resign in the middle of January, 49 B. C. Five years later, on the Ides of March, he was murdered in a meeting of the Senate and fell at the feet of the statue of Pompeius pierced from head to foot with wounds, only one of which was fatal. In the career of Cæsar there is found little to blame and few shadows have been added to the picture. He has been rightly recognized by Shakespeare as "the foremost man of all this world."

THE LADIES'

DONGOLA!

OFFICE OF ORDWAY & CLARK,

MANUFACTURERS OF

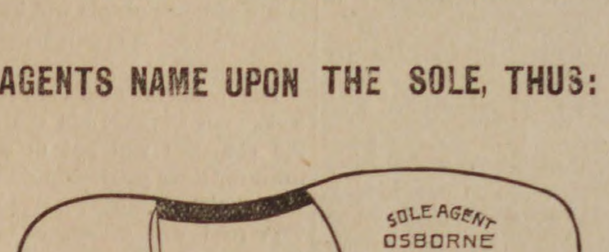
LADIES' FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.

Haverhill, Mass., February 25, 1886.

Mr. Wellman Osborne, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir: We have this day sent you a large invoice of our justly celebrated DONGOLA BOOTS. You will find they are all that has been claimed for them, and far ahead and entirely different from Kangaroo, Glove or Mat Kid. There is no other boot made for Ladies' wear which, for softness of finish, elegance of fit combined with such lasting durability, will give the entire satisfaction of this boot. They are something that has long been needed, as they wear better than French or American Kid, and will not stretch, turn purple, or look rusty. So popular and unprecedented has become the demand for these goods throughout the country, as the merits of the leather have become known, and so limited the importation of skins out of which the goods are manufactured, and so many imitations under similar names have been placed upon the market, that it has been found necessary to copyright the name.

NONE ARE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED WITH OUR AGENTS NAME UPON THE SOLE, THUS:



Also the word "DONGOLA" upon the inside lining.

We shall give you the EXCLUSIVE SALE OF THESE BOOTS IN YOUR CITY, feeling confident with your large trade that they will find a ready market, judging from the large sales they have met with in other cities. Respectfully yours,

ORDWAY & CLARK.

SPARKS.

Suppers among the firemen this spring and summer, have been the fashion, about every company having a spread. The last one, and probably the last of the season, was given Monday evening by the members of Hose Company No. 3., at their quarters on Endicott street. The tables were handsomely spread for about 40 persons and presented a very tempting appearance. About ten o'clock Foreman Hooper called on all present to fall to and partake of the good things which caterer N. C. Patterson had prepared, and the invitation needed no repetition. The menu consisted of strawberries, cream-cakes, ice cream and fruits, all of which were partaken of with a relish, after which cigars were lighted and the company adjourned to the hall a bove, where an hour or more was pleasantly passed with speeches recalling the days of the old hand engines. Among the speakers were Assistant Engineers Johnson and Southwick, Engineers Tibbetts and Reed, President Littlefield, Vice President Folsom, and Treasurer Lord of the Relief Association; ex-foreman John O. Buxton, ex-engineer E. P. Barrett, and the foremen of the other companies in the department. Foreman Hooper officiated as toast master. The party broke up at an early hour, satisfied that the boys of Hose 3 had not forgotten how to entertain their friends.

The fire alarm apparatus has begun to arrive, and is being put in position as rapidly as possible, under the direction of Supt. Rogers and Gilbert White of the Gamewell Company. The five non-interfering boxes, indicators and battery jars, together with the hammer for the alarm bell arrived Saturday and Monday. The whistle was put up on the pumping station yesterday. The indications are that the alarm will be in readiness by the 6th of July, unless some unlooked for event occurs.

Steamer 2 was taken to the brook on Endicott street, Monday evening, in order that the suction hose, which has been in service nearly 12 years might be tested. The engine worked very well for the first ten minutes, and then refused to take water. A close examination failed to disclose any accident to the pumps, but one piece of the suction hose was full of holes and was consequently condemned. The other piece was put on and the engine worked all right.

The old Volunteer hand engine now located in Derry, N. H., will attend the firemen's muster in Rutland, Vermont, July 5th.

George H. Carr and William F. Littlefield have withdrawn from Steamer No. 1.

The Hook and Ladder base ball team will play a game of ball with the G. L. Boody H. & L. team of Cochituate next Wednesday afternoon in that town.

There is some talk of a parade of the fire department this coming Fall, but whether it will be anything but talk, remains to be seen. Z

MUSICAL NOTES.

The music teachers National Association, which is now being held in Tremont Temple, Boston, is of unusual interest to musical people. This Association was formed in 1876 and its first meeting for business was held in the Wesleyan Female College, Delaware, Ohio. Its sessions are day and evening, and begun yesterday (Wednesday). To-morrow morning the subject of Music in the public schools is to be considered. W. L. Tomlins of Chicago, who has had a large experience in the training and development of children's voices, will speak upon the subject of 'The Proper Treatment of Children' s Voices," followed a discussion to be opened by H. E. Holt of Boston. It is at that session that Prof. Bill, teacher of music of this town, will introduce his class of scholars from Peabody and Beverly to explain Mr. Mason's method of teaching in the schools. There will be undoubtedly illustrations of other methods of instruction, prominently among them being the Tonic Sol Fa system which will be explained by Harry Benson of Boston. Mr. Bill's class will be expected, we learn, to sing an ordinary choral, written by a musical gentleman in Boston, at sight. We doubt not that the class will acquit them with credit to Mr. Bill and to themselves.

The Salem Cadet Band play every Sunday at the Willows. There was a large audience in attendance last Sunday evening.

J. K. Cole, of the Centre school, sang tenor at the South Church last Sunday,

Mr. Charles A. Clark, the organist of St. John's church, closes his piano teaching at his rooms in Boston after July 1st. The rehearsals of the choir here will also be suspended during the summer. Mr. Clark has a vacation of a month, in August, from the church in Peabody.

Mrs. E. A. Kemp of Danvers, sang soprano at the Baptist choir last Sunday.

At the First Baptist Church in Salem, next Sunday evening, Mrs Minnie Smith Tigh will sing Gounod's Ave Maria with violin obligato by F. C. Record. Sullivan's "Hearken unto Me" will also be rendered. Mr. Record is giving some fine music at this church.

We always knew Mr. Lucius Tuttle the popular G. P. A. of the Boston & Lowell R. R. was great in railroading. We are glad to learn, also, that his abilties are also exerted in a musical line. He is president of the N. E. Musical Festival Association which is to hold a few days session at Weirs, N. H., beginning July 20. The Association are as fortunate in having Mr. Tuttle for president, as are the Lowell R. R. in having this gentleman as its General Passenger Agent.

The American Tonic Sol-fa Association will hold its annual convention in Boston, Friday and Saturday, July 2 and 3. The meetings in which the public is most interested are those of Saturday morning and evening, to be held in the Meionaon. The morning will be given to a full explanation of the method; the evening to a public meeting at which Dr. Duryea will preside. There will be short addresses by a number of speakers, and chorus and solo singing. These two meetings are free.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall under Mr. J. C. Mullaly's direction during the last week have made a great success. The audiences have been large and enthusiastic in their appreciation of the excellent programmes presented. During the coming week a Sullivan night is to be given, and on this occasion the programme will include some of the most popular of the male chorus numbers from the operas of "Pinafore" and "Mikado" which will be sung in addition to the orchestral numbers. Other interesting features will be presented from time to time, but the orchestral programme will continue to be made the chief attraction of each evening. The admirable management of these concerts by Mr. Charles A. Ellis has made the Music Hall a favorite resort for all music-lovers, and Mr. Mullaly has gained a well-deserved popularity with the patrons of the promenade by his increasing and well-directed efforts to maintain the high repute of these summer-night concerts.

IT IS said that Cyrus W. Field proposes to say who shall NOT be Governor of Massachusetts next year. It all depends. It has been understood for some time that Governor Robinson will not be a candidate again. But if Lieut. Gov. Ames wants it—and the Republican party nominates him, as it certainly looks probable, Mr. Field may wish he had remained in New York. The people of Massachusetts are perfectly satisfied with Gov. Robinson's disposition of the N. Y. & N. E. bonds. The road is not likely now to pass into the hands of N. Y. stock brokers.

How did the programmes for the High School exhibition resemble Dr. "O'lcock's" plaster?

PEABODY'S PATRIOTISM TAKES A KEEN HOLD UPON OUR PEOPLE.

A Full and Complete Programme of the Celebration of Independence Day at Peabody.

WHOOP LA! LYDIA PINKHAM!

The Sun will rise from behind Nick Quint's barn at 4.28 a. m. sharp, and a salute of horse pistols will be fired by a gang of all night hoodlums at least two hours earlier.

The ponderous bells of the town will be rung at sunrise, and the sextons of the churches will put in a bill to the town for their patriotism.

At 6 o'clock the Naumkeag and Danvers road will commence to run horse cars.

At 6.30, Officer Goodwin will place the storm signals on the town house, and hoist the flag to the mast head of the flag staff.

About this time, the 18 or 20 special police who have worn a badge for the first time, will go to breakfast, and the town will be guarded by the patriotic day police who have been sleeping during the night.

At 7 o'clock, Joe Peabody will start out with his baker team, drawn by two milk white horses and driven by the foreman of Steamer 2.

At 8 o'clock, a general procession will be formed in four divisions in the following order, the right resting on the curb stone in front of the town hall. The striking of the gong by the "sage of West Peabody" will be a signal for starting the procession.

FIRST DIVISION.

1st. Peabody Special Police with badges (silver) mounted.

2d. Committee of Arrangements, and veteran firemen in carriages and mule-back.

3d. Town Officers and Officers of the Law and Order League afoot in Uniform.

4th. Harrington's "strikers" and "Brunswick Importation" bearing the olive branch of peace to represent the millennium.

5th. A Calthumpian Band followed by the boss and journeyman barbers, making wry faces at Young America, and bearing the chromo of the "Jew barber" on canvas-cloth.

SECOND DIVISION.

1st. The defunct Rowley Band and the Odd Fellows Minstrels, and the Warriors and Braves of the Red Men, with the Prophet manipulating the strings.

2d. Order of Free and Easy (Brick) Masons and Young Ladies representing States and Territories—none of the latter under 38 allowed to parade.

3rd. Try-Sickle and Buy-Sickle riders in charge of the Peabody Cycle Club and distinguished guests.

4th. Peabody Base Ball Team in charge of the "dude." All dressed in striped trowsers and white plug hats. Gus Langmaid bearing the banner, "We never won yet."

5th The would be gunners who go to Ipswich Neck, bearing a banner with the inscription "Never at home Sundays."

THIRD DIVISION.

1st. Fire Department, representing Niagara Falls at high water, headed by the Depot Carriage Fifer and the "Over the line" brigade.

2d. Newspaper Correspondents in barouches, wearing sickly smiles and button hole bouquets and armed with breech loading quart bottles.

3d. The Board of Health in undress uniforms, and carrying carboys of carbolic acid assafœtida, and W. T. Lee's Dalmation powders.

4th. By special invitation the West Peabody farmers club and the Legislative committee on towns for 1885, presided over by the "Reverend Crank."

5th. The Goddess of Liberty on Roller Skates.

FOURTH DIVISION.

1st. The orator of the day, Bill Smith, in his famous stump speeches and a band of blind musicians playing the "dead march."

2nd. Grand Allegorical Illustration entitled "Sympathy," representing driver Morgan trying to get his large feet into Driver Price's small boots, while the bell is ringing an alarm of fire.

Following the Fourth Division will be citizens on foot and on hand, tramps, spring poets, truant children, dudes in starched pants, fat men in tights, visitors from the rural districts, etc.

As stated above, the procession will form and march till they get tired, when they will listen to Bill Smith the silver tongued orator, and human-mouthed bass viol, as he reads the "Declependence of Indignation." After which the company will adjourn to dinner on Buxton's hill, where liquid refreshment may be gathered from the tank.

No Lady under sixty years of age admitted unless accompanied by her parents.

At 12 o'clock, the sun will be directly overhead.

The afternoon will be given entirely to the special police who will escort home the wounded and lock up the intoxicated.

Darkness will set in when the sun goes down, and a large number will go to Salem to fill up with fire works and fire water. After which—headache.

The whole will conclude with the head of the house sitting down to figure his fabulous expenses, while the doctor is patching up the boy who played with the deadly toy pistol.

No extra of the PRESS will be issued. Everybody celebrate.

Rev. L. L. Wood, formerly of the Baptist Church, thus speaks of his new appointment from Helena, Montana, to Salt Lake City, Utah.

"We go to Salt Lake City, where we have been appointed from the Missionary Rooms in New York, and where we have been unanimously called by the church. It is one of the most attractive cities for a residence that we have ever visited—a veritable oasis in the desert, a modern Damascus embowered in cooling shade with sparkling waters; our admiration for it has increased each time we have seen it. Yet we reluctantly leave Montana. We have many strong calls and temptations to remain both from spiritual and secular fields. In the latter our bread and water might be surer than it sometimes has been, but we are not our own; we 'have been bought with a price,' and our missionary experience for the past three months has given us a fresh incentive to our work. Yet there are times when nothing seems so sweet as rest. A Scotchman once lived so remote from neighbors that his only child had never seen a human being except his father and mother. One day the little fellow rushed into the house all excited, and cried, 'Oh! Oh! there's a thing coming looks jess like me father!' There is a spot in Montana almost as secluded as this; the hills and trees hide the homes of the distant neighbors, the road is scarcely in sight, and passers-by are seldom seen. We call the spot 'our ranch.' We sometimes feel that if we could rest there for a little time, in our comfortable cabin, with the few horses, cattle, pigs and hens we call ours, with our books and with our scattered family once more about us, that we could almost say 'Now Lord lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.'"

We have received from the Boston & Maine Railroad an elegantly illustrated book whose title page indicates its scope and object: "Seashore, Lakes, and Mountains. Descriptive of the Seashore, Lake and Mountain Resorts on the Boston & Maine Railroad and Immediate Connections. Containing list of Summer Excursions, Time Tables, Maps, Hotel and Boarding-House list, etc., etc. Illustrated. Issued by Passenger Department Boston & Maine Railroad, 1886." Those who contemplate vacation trips this season will find here a great variety of excursions given in detail, from which to select one adapted to their particular inclination, taste, leisure and means. Some of them require very small expenditure of either time or money, and some of them are more elaborate—while all are astonishingly low priced.

The fact has just come to light that Samuel Roads, Jr., Esq., declined to take the customary fee for delivering the oration here on Memorial day and generously told the committee to turn it into the Grand Army Relief fund.—Beverly Citizen.

Coal dealers are authority for the statement, that householders had better lay in their winter stock of coal while the price is low, for every indication of the market shows that an advance will soon occur. Our advertising columns will show the principle dealers.

The telegraph gives us the rare as also astounding piece of news that Mrs. Cleveland went to church alone last Sunday, her liege lord not being back from his fishing trip. And yet there are people who love to ridicule the "silly things" printed in country weeklies.

The Board of Health took the undertaker's team last week and went on a tour of inspection. Several nuisances were found to exist, including the broken down culvert on Union street, where the drainage from half a dozen tenement houses flows. This will be abated by the town and abuttors.

The report of the engineer of the pumping station for June is as follows:—Whole number of gallons pumped, 18,285, 940; average per day, 609,531; pounds of coal used, 43,779; average per day, 1459; gallons pumped per pound of coal, 417-7-10; running time, 7 hours 37 minutes per day.

It is understood that Mr. C. A. Thomas will fit up the skating rink previous to the beginning of next season, with a stage, and scenery, making it a convenient theatre as well as skating rink. Attractions are already being booked, and will probably open with Warfield & Lignum's variety company.

The curculio is bad on the plums this season, and we notice most of them already stung where they have not been attended to. The way to get rid of the pests is to spread a sheet under the tree and give it a good shaking two or three times a day. The insects drop upon the sheet, when they can be readily dispatched between the thumb and fingers. This is the only way the curculio can be headed off. All other remedies are simply Bohemian oats frauds.—Exchange.

It is said that disease is often communicated by the handling of infected money, but you folks that owe us, don't hesitate about paying us on that account; we carry a heavy life insurance, and are willing to take great risks in the above matter, and, if necessary, will fumigate the cash. Just send it in. We will attend to the disease part.

The tenure of office bill which has passed the legislature, provides that a city or town if it so choose, can elect their school teachers during good behavior. This should be generally adopted, as it tends to improve the schools and the teachers feel that their position is permanent and there will be no doubt of their election from year to year.

A recent visitor to the States Prison saw Billy Hayes and says Billy is not happy where he is. The food does not suit him and he has grown very thin. His head troubles him to such an extent that the doctors have prescribed leeches and they are frequently applied. But for the fruit and other luxuries that are furnished him by his family, Billy would be having a hard time.

A farmer states that for five years he has successfully prevented the ravages of the cabbage worm by placing a stock of pennyroyal between the leaves of the cabbage plant. It is cheap, simple and worth trying. Here is also a remedy for destroying the maggot that eats away the main root of the cabbage plants: scrape away the dirt from about the stalk to the depth of half an inch, sprinkle slaked lime about and replace the dirt.

A drummer at the hotel the other day, explained the new and very intellectual way that they have at fashionable saloons for "drawing for the drinks instead of "shaking". "Fifteen or 20 matches are thrown down in a heap, and they are drawn alternately by the players by ones, twos or threes, as they choose. The man who gets the last one is "stuck."' This looks like a very simple game of chance, but there's "method in it," and the fellow who was introducing it, had it down fine.

The musical sound of the new fire whistle on the pumping station was heard this afternoon.

We were shown recently a plug of tobacco in which a mouse had been pressed, but sufficiently covered so that it could not be seen without first breaking the plug. This, of course, is not a sample of a new brand, but it shows how very careful they are in regard to cleanliness in its preparation. Chewers of the weed can have this to think about.

It is said that never before in the history of Odd Fellowship has there been so much interest manifested as at present, which is probably owing to the demonstration incident to the meeting of the Sovereign Grand Lodge in September. The parade of the Patriarchs Militant will eclipse anything of the kind ever attempted by any civic society in this country.

Recently in a theatrical entertainment a young lady removed her four story hat to allow a newspaper man who sat behind her to see the stage. He died shortly afterwards and left her $5,046,200. Our object in calling attention to this is simply to call public attention to the wisdom of treating our reporters with consideration. They can't live always and it may be to the advantage of some one when their will is read.

The telephone managers caution the public against the fallacy of using resonators on the telephone instruments. They are of use in some cases, no doubt, but for the most part are only a catch-penny contrivance, of various patterns and shapes, cone, globe and cylinder. An intelligent person who comprehends the use and working of the telephone can use the instrument quite as well without a resonator as with it, and save the company considerable annoyance and expense in repairing instruments. The resonator gives the diaphragm of the transmitter a violent vibration, which is communicated to the platinum point behind, and this in turn wears the carbon button back of it, so as to render the instrument useless in a little while.

Poet's Corner.

Our Home-Maker.

Where the mountains slope to the westward,
And their purple chalices hold
The new-made wine of the sunset—
Crimson and amber and gold—

In this one, wide-opened door-way,
With the elm-boughs overhead—
The house all garnished behind her,
And the plentiful table spread—

She has stood to welcome our coming,
Watching our upward climb,
In the sweet June weather that brought us,
Oh, many and many a time!

Again is her doorway opened,
And the house is garnished and sweet;
But she silently waits for our coming,
And we enter with silent feet.

A little within she is waiting:
Not where she has met us before;
For over the pleasant threshold
She is only to cross once more.

The smile on her face is quiet,
And a lily is on her breast;
Her hands are folded together,
And the word on her lips is " rest."

And yet it looks like a welcome,
For her work is compassed and done;
All things are seemly and 'ready,
And her summer is just begun.

It is we who may not cross over,
Only with song and prayer.
A little way into the glory
We may reach, as we leave her there.

But we cannot think of her idle:
She must be a home-maker still.
God giveth that work to the angels
Who fittest the task fulfill.

And somewhere yet, in the hilltops
Of the country that hath no pain,
She will watch in her beautiful door-way
To bid us a welcome again.

Love's magic of late has stolen
The charm from her life's still ways.

She turns from her book, and rises,
To gaze through the casement low,
The languorous lily perfumes
Towards her on soft airs below—
White lilies! Ah, once she loved them,
She gathers red roses now.

Oh, when will the noon be sunset,
And over the green hillside
And up through the beeches shadows
The lover she looks for ride?
And when will this life be ended,
And bring the bright life untried?

While thus she waits in impatience,
Nought guesseth the Lady Clare,
That, sweet as are Love's red roses,
Full often a thorn they bear.
And the new life that seems so joyous
May bring with it weight of care.

Perhaps in the years that follow,
When cares press heavily,
And the thorns have pierced through the roses,
Then, all their dreamings will be
Of the old, sweet life 'mid the lilies,
In maidenhood blithe and free.

I Love You.

She climbed upon my willing knee
And softly whispered unto me,
" I love you."

Her dainty arms were round my neck,
Her sunny curls were in my face,
And in her tender eyes I saw
The soul of innocence and grace.

And like a sunbeam gliding through
The clouds that hide the skies of blue,
Her smile found access to my heart,
And bade the shadows all depart.

O, moment of apocalypse,
In which I saw the stately ships
That erstwhile sailed away from me,
Come riding back across the sea.
I would you might return and stay
Within my lonely heart alway.

God bless the darling little child
Who looked up in my face and smiled,
And wrought upon my heart a spell
More sweet than songs of Israel.

Oh, angels, listen while I pray
That you will make her life as sweet
As that brief moment was to me
When'er I heard her lips repeat,
" I love you."

To Her In the Country.

Round me the rumble and the thun'drous beat
Of all a city swells and dies;
Round thee the holy, silent incense sweet
Of perfect flowers and perfect skies.
'Round me the agony of daily strife
Is waged for honor, fame and gold;
Round thee the halo of a country life,
That fits thee like a crown, is rolled.

Are we apart? Nay, love, I think not so;
Our hearts beat strong across the space.
No lands divide us long, my love, I know;
My soul will find its resting place.
And yet the city's thund'rous, throbbing maze,
And all the country's perfect skies
Were one to me, could I a moment gaze
Into the summer of thine eyes.

Selected Story.

A Fortune Teller.

One day Mrs. Lorrimer's daughter, Violet, was nowhere to be found; neither was the gentleman, Senor Espanol, who taught the guitar. The whole city was alarmed by the account of the mysterious disappearance of a beautiful belle and a hard-working, gentlemanly young foreigner. However, when some one had discovered that the last gave lessons to the first, an inference was drawn by some cool looker-on.

"May they not have gone together?"

The mother at once drove the slanderer from her presence, preferring the idea that her Violet was murdered. However, before long a penitent letter all blotted with tears reached the poor old lady, all alone in her great Fifth Avenue mansion. Violet was married to Senor Espanol.

The more one loves a person tbe more furious does any deception on her part make one. A less loving mother might have forgiven. Stung to madness, this one wrote a terrible letter to the foolish girl who had so hurt her. The husband, a hot Spaniard, read it. It insulted him, and he forbade his wife ever to see her parent again. To do him justice, love, and no mercenary motive, had led him to elope with the pretty heiress.

So the gulf was fixed between the only two of the same blood who lived on earth, and Senor Espanol began to give lessons on the guitar for two instead of one. Then for three, four and five. If he had lived a little longer it would have been for six. But the day the fourth child was born, a countryman, who had mistook him for a rival, stabbed him in the back. He apologized the next moment, but the poor victim did not live to hear him through, but died trying to express the fact that the gentleman was perfectly excusable.

And so Violet, who had been very happy with her music master, was left a widow with four babies, no money, and no accomplishment that had been sufficiently cultivated to earn a living by. Of course she took in sewing, and of course a day came when there was a a very small prospect of supper and not even a dream of breakfast.

Not a penny in the house, not a loaf of bread in the closet, not a dollar's worth of work to be got anywhere, what was she to do? The poor little woman walked up and down and cried. That did not help her. She looked over the relics of the past. There were pretty pieces of jewelry, worth nothing. Valuable things had all been sold long ago. She glanced out of the window. A woman with a very large new basket and no shoes went begging from door to door.

The basket was worth two dollars and a half, the shoes could be bought for two. The singular circumstance preyed upon her mind. She began to take an interest in the ways and manners of beggars as the awful expectation of becoming one began to haunt her.

"I could drown myself," she said, "but I could not well drown four children, like a litter of puppies."

Then leaning her chin on her hands she watched from her window another woman, with a handkerchief over her head going from door to door. Was she begging? It seemed not. Once or twice she entered and stayed some time. At last she saw her at her own door, and heard her going from room to room. There was a knock at the door. She opened it, and the woman was there.

"Well?" she said inquiringly.

"Let me tell your fortune, lady. I only charge twenty-five cents," said the woman.

"My fortune is told, since I have not twenty-five cents in the world," said Violet.

The woman turned away.

"Stop a minute," said Violet. "In this age do people say you tell their fortunes?"

"No age is too old," said the woman. "I just told an old lady's fortune below. It was in the cards that she was to have a husband—her fourth. She gave me a dollar. Look!" she opened her palm. "I make money, I do. I'm a seventh child; I see the future. I'll take any bit of jewelry if you have not any money. Have your fortune told?"

But Violet shook her head and closed the door hastily.

"I can not steal, and to beg I am ashamed," said she to herself. "After it is dark to-night I will go out and tell fortunes. Then she took two flat-irons to the junk shop, bought a loaf of bread and a pint of milk, and fed her four children—she for whom nothing had once been dainty enough, and who had ridden in her own carriage.

She put the children to bed, and left the key with a neighbor, in case of fire, a dread that haunts those many storied houses like a ghost, and then, disguished in veil, hood and shawl, went forth on her errand. It was a crazy dream. She had not courage to attempt fortune-telling. It was worse than begging. She wandered along the streets, coming at last to the homes of luxury. In the end she stood before her mother's window. There was a light in the basement, and through the lace curtains she saw a table spread, and the shadow of a figure she knew to be her mother's on the curtain; and there, drawing down the shade, was Martha, who had nursed her when a child.

Tears filled her eyes. It was a paradise which she never hoped to regain. Had not her mother written:

"A curse on you. Never darken my doors more unless you wish to hear me utter it."

But there at least she had not the terror of strangers upon her; she could beg or tell fortunes. Martha was superstitious and always had dreams of matrimony, and of the coming back of a lover who had gone to sea when she was in her teens, and had never been heard of since.

She crept up to the window and tapped on the panes. In a moment Martha opened the door.

The hooded figure drew near.

"Let me tell your fortune?" she said.

"Bother," remarked Martha. "I am past fortunes."

"What?" said Violet. "With a lover gone to sea?"

"Lord save us!" cried Martha.

"And in one place twenty years," said Violet.

"You know more than is good," said Martha. Stop a bit. Are you one of them clairvoyants?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"Could you see where people are, what's come of them and that?" asked Martha. "For instance, a gal that's been gone eight years, could you look for her in a dream, like as I have heard they can, and find her?"

"Yes, I think I could," said Violet.

"Sit here, then," said Martha, pointing to a chair in the hall, and hurried into the dining-room.

She came back in a moment.

"Come and speak to missus," she said. And Violet, trembling so she could scarcely stand, entered her mother's presence.

No love is like a mother's. Violet had known that since she cast it off. She knew it now, looking on the pale face where wrinkles had come so thickly—on the hair, all turned gray now—on the sad eyes, that were so bright when she last saw them.

She longed to kneel at her mother's feet and beg forgiveness, but she dared not yet; had not she sinned too deeply to hope for pardon? She stood silent with her head bowed down.

"They tell me you are a clairvoyant," said Mrs. Lorrimer. "I have not much faith in such things, and if the power prospers its possessors so little it cannot be worth much; but still I have something I should like to ask you. You search for lost things?"

Violet bowed.

"If you can find something I have lost I will repay you well," said Mrs. Lorrimer. "Here, sit down. Perhaps if you have this knowledge, you can tell me what I have lost."

Violet sat down.

"It should be darker," she said—"will you lower the light?"

Martha lowered the light and stood by the lady's chair—and there was silence. Violet had cast back her veil, but the firelight was not bright enough to show her features.

"Lady," she said in a low voice, "it is not gold or silver, that I see; it is nothing that can be bought for money. What I see is a girl."

"Good heavens!" cried the old lady.

"A girl of sixteen, with fair hair and blue eyes," said Violet. "That was what she was when you saw her last. Am I right?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Lorrimer.

"You loved her," said Violet; she loved you. But she deceived you; she was wicked—wicked—wicked; but there was an excuse for her. She fell in love; she was mad for awhile. You cast her off. She is gone. You will never see her more."

"Hush! hush!" cried Mrs. Lorrimer. "She was not bad. I was wicked; I knew what it was to love, yet I forsook her because she knew it also. Look again. How does life use her?"

"She is a widow, and very poor," said Violet. "So wretchedly poor that she does not know where to get bread; but she will not come to you. You would curse her. You will never see her again."

The old lady started from her chair.

"What are you? How do you know the secrets of my life, the words I most repent uttering? Look again! Tell me I shall see her once more. Tell me where to find the only babe I ever held against my breast! My little one—my Violet—where is she?" And the woman she addressed fell upon her knees and clasped her hands.

"She is here," she cried, "Mother, she is here!" and the two wept together in each other's arms; and all was forgiven.

The good mansion is no longer desolate. There are little children's voices there, and mother and daughter are together once more. And in that other world, where we cannot believe that wrath endures, doubtless the lover of her youth rejoices that Violet's mother's fortune was told so well.

A writer in the British Medical Journal advises people to be careful not to slice up a pineapple with the same knife they use in peeling it, as the rind contains an acid organia substance which is likely to cause a swollen mouth and sore lips. In Cuba salt is used as an antidote for the poison of pineapple peel.

A HORSE'S INTELLIGENCE.

A horse which had been in possession of the Peters family, in Bushkill, Pa., for twenty years, and which was famous for the almost human intelligence he frequently displayed, died recently. During the last few years of the horse's life he had been permitted to run at liberty, but was frequently hitched up to haul the dead bodies of cattle or horses that died on the farm to a place near the Delaware River, where the carcasses were buried. The old horse always stood near and watched the burials with great interest and attention.

Some time ago this horse fell sick. One day he was missed from an inclosure where he was being cared for. A search was made for him, and he was finally found lying dead on the spot where he had hauled the dead bodies of so many of his kind. As the place was out of the way of the old horse's usual haunts, and as he had never been known to go there except when driven there with some dead animal, no one who knew the horse believes that he did not seek the spot feeling that he was about to die, and to save the trouble of hauling his dead body there to be buried.

Among the instances told of his intelligence are the following: Late one night members of the family that owned him were awakened by a great noise on a piazza of the house. There was the loud neighing of a horse, and a heavy stamping on the piazza floor. One of the inmates of the house went to the door. There was the old horse stamping and kicking and neighing with all his power. The discovery was made that an outhouse near the dwelling was on fire. The old horse had given the alarm, and a disastrous fire was prevented.

One spring there was a flood in a stream on the place. A blind horse belonging to a neighbor got out of its pasture, and wandering down to the swollen stream in some way got into the water. It swam about in a circle, and was unable to reach either shore. No one could render any aid to the poor animal, and there seemed no escape for it from drowning. The old Peters horse came along while the blind horse was struggling in the water, and, after a moment's survey of the situation, plunged in. He swam out to the blind horse, and headed it off as it turned to make its usual circle, thus keeping its head pointed straight for shore as it swam. By heading the blind horse first on one side and then on the other, he guided it safely to shore.

WHIST AT COURT.

One day, at a pleasant country house, where Edward Everett, Washington Irving and Bancroft were guests, the conversation, as was natural among three gentlemen who had all been foreign ministers, fell upon diplomatic life. Irving, with a sly twinkle in his eye, was soon telling comical incidents of his experience, when Everett, after listening with an air of great amusement, said: "One of the drollest incidents in my diplomatic life occurred at my presentation as United States Minister in England. I went to the palace by appointment with Lord Melbourne, feeling very uncomfortable in my official toggery, and found that the Neapolitan ambassador, the Prince Castelcicala, was to be presented at the same time. We were introduced to each other, and, after a proper interval, the official presentations to Her Majesty took place. When they were over (probably at Windsor) Lord Melbourne said, 'Your excellencies will be expected to remain, and in the evening join in a game of whist with the Duchess of Kent.' We bowed," continued Mr. Everett, "and Lord Melbourne added, 'I play a very poor game myself; in fact, I scarcely understand it, but the duchess is very fond of it.' 'And I,' said the Prince Castelcicala, turning to me, 'am a very poor player; and if I should chance to be your excellency's partner, I invoke your forbearance in advance.'

"We were all moving down the corridor toward the duchess's apartments," said Mr. Everett, with a grave smile, "and it was very amusing to hear our mutual apologies and deprecations, especially as I remarked in my turn that I was not very familiar with the game. Here we were, three dignified personages in middle life, clad in extraordinary attire, and solemnly proceeding to play a game which we imperfectly understood, and for which we did not care in the least. When we reached the duchess's apartments she was seated at the table, and we were formally presented, and, at her gracious invitation, seated ourselves for the game. Just as we were beginning to play, a lady in waiting approached, and placed herself at the back of the duchess's chair. The duchess then turned to us, and said, politely, 'Your excellencies will excuse me if I rely upon the advice of my friend here, for I really am a very poor player.' It was inexpressibly droll," said Mr. Everett, "and it was a curious illustration of the ceremonial character of Court life."

Formerly the nobles of England prided themselves on having a rookery in the neighborhood of their castles, because rooks were regarded as "fowls of good omen." On this account no one was allowed to kill them under severe penalties. When rooks deserted a rookery it was said to precede the downfall of a family upon whose property it was.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made, We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bousley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated courtesy whether anything is desired or not.

SAMPLES OF EDITORIAL NOTICES GIVEN IN DAKOTA FOR SMALL FAVORS THANKFULLY RECEIVED.

As some little misunderstanding seems to exist concerning the size of puff this paper will give in return for favors real or supposed, we take this opportunity to publish the following rates, which take effect from this date:

For one watermelon handed in at the office we will say: "Mr. Gardenstruck, our esteemed fellow townsman, presented us last Wednesday afternoon with a large luscious watermelon of the Plymouth Rock variety on which the printers feasted. May he live long and prosper." In case the melon proves to be green this will the form: "Farmer Gardenstruck laid a good sized melon on our table one day this week. Thanks."

A small lot of new potatoes wil call out the following: "Uncle Abner Stubbleplow remembers ye editor just as we go to press with a most luscious looking mess of new potatoes. We and our family expect to revel in the fruit during the coming week. He informs us that the bugs are doing great damage to the vines of many of his neighbors. Uncle, you struck the printers in the right spot; may your shadow never grow less!"

When a box of cigars is left this is the formula: "The sanctum of the Bell was invaded last Tuesday by the genial presence of Tom Liverpills, the handsome young proprietor of the Red Front Pioneer Drug Store, who placed on tap a full box of choice Habanas. Here's to you, Tom! Our many readers will remember that he has just got in a full new line of paints, oils, axle grease, condition powders, perfumery, putty and other drugs and toilet articles."

Green corn will produce the following editorial effect: "Ye scribe's family has been enjoying another luxury for the last four days, Mrs. Deacon Churchdebt having presented our wife with a good dozen of roasting ears. Such favors as this are fully appreciated by yours truly, as well as by his wife and family. May Mrs C meet her reward is our earnest wish."

This for the big egg: "Squire Applejack laid the largest sample of hen fruit on our desk one day this week that we have ever seen. He assures us that it measures eighteen by ten feet in circumference. Next!"

A bouquet will be acknowledged like this: "Yesterday afternoon, as ye pencil pusher was busy with an unexpected rush of job work, who should come in but Miss Birdie Pistolpractice. She presented us with a beautiful bouquet of wild flowers which she had plucked with her own fair hands. Among the varieties we noticed fireweed, dandelion, wild buckwheat, red-top, tansy and sunflowers. It shall remain many days to beautify our sanctum. Our wife is also pleased with it."

The giver of a spare-rib may expect this: "Our genial and justly popular neighbor, Major Porcine, having frequently noticed the hungry look on the printer's face, took occasion early Monday morning to leave a mammoth spare-rib at our humble abode, taken from one of his famous drove of Southdown porkers. We and our family have accordingly been feasting on fresh meat. By the way, we understand that the major will accept the nomination for the Legislature if it is tendered him. He is the man for the place."

A turkey will inspire this: "While sitting in our sanctum sanctorum about 11 o'clock Thursday morning reclining our head in our hands, we were greatly surprised as well as pleased by having Colonel McTough walk in with a mysterious air and a bundle under his arm. We had just finished writing our leader found on the first page entitled "True Tariff Reform as Compared with Tariff Jugglery, and felt considerable fatigue, but it was immediately dispelled when the handsome colonel disclosed a large, fat turkey in the bundle which he assured us was for our Thanksgiving dinner. To say that we were pleased but faintly expresses the emotions which surged through our breast. We immediately called our wife, who was even more pleased than we. It is such things as this that make life amid the exacting cares of the newspaper office endurable and causes us to keep on the editorial harness without repining. Colonel, may heaven reward you! It may not be out of place to inform our many readers that the colonel's friends expect the coming Legislature to elect him to the United States Senate. He seems to be the unanimous choice of our people. We predict that he will get it on the first ballot."

Of the many valuable excursion books this season none are more worthy of mention than the attractive volume, "Sea Shore, Lakes and Mountains," recently issued by the Boston & Maine railroad. Its contents, as its name implies, contains a vast fund of information for all in search of rest and health. The Boston & Maine route, which now operates a total of 588 miles, has become a favorite for summer tourists, and its service this year will be not only superior to that of previous years, but equal to any in New England. The book just issued is unusually large, gives full information in regard to the seacoast from Nahant to Bar Harbor and the mountain and lake regions of New Hampshire and Maine. The volume contains several excellent illustrations, together with complete lists of excursion rates and hotel accommodations. One of the most valuable features of the book are the maps. There is one of New England and the provinces; of the coast between Boston and York beach; of Lake Winnepiseogee and surroundings; the fishing and hunting grounds of New Hampshire, Maine and portions of Canada; Mt. Desert and contiguous coast of Maine; and an elaborate bird's eye view of the White Mountains. It is an admirable book in every way. Those who wish may have a copy by applying to the local agent in Salem, or at the company's headquarters in Boston.

The Art Amateur for June contains two superb plaque designs, a beautiful female head with a background of almond blossoms, and a crane dancing to the music of Cupid's pipe together with a large panel design of birds and a nest upon a blossoming cherry bough, a cup and saucer decoration (may-flowers), two South Kensington designs for newspaper racks and a second page of monograms in K. The practical features of the number are especially strong, including the first of a series of papers on "Sketching from Nature," the first of a series on "Water Color Painting," the continuation of the valuable series on "Flower Painting in Oils," and the well maintained department of "Amateur Photography." Much space is also given to embroidery with especial reference to applique and to ecclesiastical work. Price 35 cents. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

Babyland for July opens with a charming full page engraving "The Music Lesson" which is followed by illustrated rhymes and stories that will interest the smallest member of the family and captivate the youngest reader. Every boy and girl will find the premiums offered for clubs very attractive and well worth striving for. Send ten cents in stamps for sample copies to use in getting up a club. Address D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass.

FOR HAY FEVER.—"Give Ely's Cream Balm a trial. This justly celebrated remedy for the cure of catarrh, hay fever, cold in the head, etc., can be obtained of any reputable druggist, and may be relied upon as a safe and pleasant remedy for the above complaints and will give immediate relief. It is not a liquid, snuff or powder, has no offensive odor and can be used at any time with good results, as thousands can testify, among them some of the attaches of this office."—Spirit of the Times, May 29, 1886.

The July number of the Young Ladies' Journal has reached us from the International News Company of New York. There is no more interesting novels published than the several stories that run through this publication. They are exciting and full of interest from the very first paragraph, and new complete stories are found in each number. All the latest styles in dressmaking, millinery and fancy work are distinctly shown by illustrations and the whole combined makes the most interesting magazine now before the public. Get a copy at Mrs. Gilson's.

It is estimated that fully fifteen hundred dollars a year will be saved in reduced rates of insurance among the property holders in the manufacturing districts alone, owing to the establishment of the fire alarm.—Beverly Citizen. How much will the reduction b in this town for the same reason.

The July Magazine of American History presents a rich table of contents. It opens with the editor's delightful "Historic Homes in Lafayette Place," under the general title of "A Neglected Corner of the Metropolis"—a chapter as informing as it is entertaining, and of national as well as local interest—accompanied by nearly a score of unique historic illustrations. This magazine is doing a grea work for American history. The admirably well written "History of the Fisheries Question," by J. MacDonald Oxley, of Ottawa, the third paper of the number, gives a clearer view of the perplexing situation in regard to our Fisheries than anything heretofore published. The war papers this month are two in number, and extremely readable and instructive. General Alfred E. Lee writes of "Cedar Mountain"; and Dr. John Shrady furnishes a graphic chapter of his "Reminiscences of Libby Prison," with an illustration of the old prison building. This Magazine has attained a place of honor in the literature of the period not exceeded by any other periodical. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

Every housekeeper knows how obscure and self contradictory are many of the "directions for cooking" which accompany food preparations, even those most widely used. Their perplexing absurdity in the case of artificial foods for infants is almost criminal. Marion Harland has been experimenting upon the cooking of a few of the best known infants' foods with a view to correcting this evil, and the result is a demonstration of the proper method, in each case, of putting the food in a suitable condition for an infant's stomach, independently of the printed instructions. This makes the leading subject in the July Babyhood. An illustrated article on the "Care of Children's Feet" is equally instructive. Also Babyhood's prize article on "Protracted Crying Spells." 5 Beckman St., New York. $1.50 a year.

A leading citizen of Hagerstown, Md., Mr. George W. Harris, had suffered for some time with facial neuralgia and toothache, when he tried St. Jacobs Oil. He says: "It gave me instantaneous relief, and I consider it a wonderful remedy."

The Fitchburg road has arranged for excursions from Boston and other points to the summit of Mt. Wachusett. The route is by rail to Fitchburg, and thence by an excellent line of stages, the distance from that city being 10 miles. The round trip rate from Boston to the Mountain House is only $4.

A Great Victory
A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by
Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

ASK ANYONE what Col. Stone has done in Congress for the past six years, and if they happen to be intimate friends of the Col., they will say he did good work for his dtstrict in getting a slice of the River and Harbor bill. If that is all we send a man to Congress for, it would be more to our credit to let the seat remain unoccupied.

WHAT HAS become of the Loring congressional boom. It seems to have been lost about where it started. But it will probably turn up again when the agricultural fairs get in running order. At present the handsome Doctor is taking a great interest (?) in the crops in the rural part of this district. He will strike a Blunt edge if he goes too far North.

DID SOME one say that the committee on the investigation of Cedar Grove Cemetery was ready to report? We have not heard of any meetings of the committee since the visit of Rev. Mr. Spaulding and a few citizens to Cedar Grove. But, seriously, the town expects this committee to do its duty. If the management of Cedar Grove Cemetery should have no such censure as was given them by Rev. Mr. Spaulding in town meeting, the town ought to know it and act accordingly. In any case a report is expected.

IT IS to be hoped that the Republicans of Essex County will recognize this fall the utility of making a non-partisan nomination, and place in nomination the present efficient district attorney, Mr. Hurlburt. Mr. Hurlburt has won the respect and admiration of the best men of all parties, not only for his efficiency but for the impartial manner in which he has performed the duties of his office. His lucid presentation of cases, and the care and system in their preparation, has been several times complimented by the court. In the disposal of liquor cases, he has been a terror to offenders. Cases which have been appealed, have not been put on file and laid away for several terms, as has been the custom in this county in years past, but they have been brought to trial. This has been true not only from this town but all through the county. Several Lynn dealers, who have previously defied the law, and suffered no detriment to their business, have found that there is a power which they are bound to respect. The Republicans will make no mistake if they nominate Mr. Hurlburt, without reference to the democratic convention. If the latter re-nominate him, so much the better. But in the latter case, for the republicans to run a man against Mr. Hurlburt, would be poor policy, and such nomination would not receive the full party vote. Mr. Hurlburt is wanted by the people of Essex County as his own successor for district attorney, and it will not be wisdom for either party to attempt to set aside their wishes.

For the twenty-four hours between 5.30 o'clock Sunday evening, July 4th, and 5.30 of July 5th, the Peabody firemen were kept pretty busy answering alarms. The first was given at 5.57 Sunday evening and was taken from an alarm in Salem. The bell on the house of Hose 4 in Salem being taken for that of Hose 4 in Peabody. The apparatus went down Main street, up Washington, Sewall and Pierpoint back to the square. About a dozen members of the company in the Central Station were present at the engine house when the second alarm was given at 1.30 o'clock Monday morning, and quick time was made in getting out and at work. This proved to be a fire, discovered by officer Goodwin, in an outhouse in the rear of the Stimpson block on Lowell street and was evidently of incendiary origin. Hose 1 laid a line from the hydrant at the foot of School street and put on a stream of water which soon extinguished the flames. On this alarm the apparatus from the Central Station turned out, put out the fire, and was housed again in just nine minutes from the first stroke of the bell. Hose 5 from South Peabody made quick time in getting round. The third alarm was given at 3.55 Monday morning and was caused by the striking of the bell on Hose 4's house. At the previous alarm the wheel to the bell was broken and the bell left inverted, and in setting it back in position it struck several times and was taken up by the firemen on the square. The fourth and last for the day was caused by a slight fire in the barn owned by the Upton estate at the corner of Franklin and Lowell street, at 5.10 Monday afternoon. This fire was extinguished without the aid of the department by O. B. Chadwick and J. W. H. Ferguson. The barn was occupied by ex-Chief Littlefield. This fire was caused by two children building a little bon fire of old fire crackers in a salt box and trying to smother it with hay, an operation they were not successful in. Besides the above alarms there were several fires caused by fireworks for which no alarm was given. Fire crackers lodging on the roof set fire to the house of George H. Abbott on Lowell street in the forenoon of Monday, but it was discovered and extinguished by the neighbors. The employes of the Essex Glue Company put out a fire on the roof of the old boiler house on Glue Hill about 11 o'clock Monday forenoon. This was also caused by fire crackers. Falling fireworks set fire to the roof of the house of Samuel H. Humphrey in Goldthwait Place at 8.30 in the evening of the 5th, and this was put out by the neighbors. At 4 o'clock Tuesday morning the firemen were again awakened by the shrill screech of the whistle on the James A. Lord tannery in Salem, giving an alarm for the burning of Peter Marrin's store house and paste shop on Hanson street, Salem, but no alarm was given in Peabody.

Hose Company No. 3 were timed by several different parties as they answered the alarms of the 5th. On the 4 o'clock alarm they were timed at Stevens street, making the run from the house on Endicott street from the striking of the Central Station bell to Stevens street in just three and one-half minutes. On the 5.10 alarm the same distance was covered in four and one-fourth minutes, being timed by the same gentleman, the well known harness maker, Herbert Gardner.

The fifth alarm of fire this week was given Tuesday afternoon at 3.45 o'clock for a fire in the woods in West Peabody. A dispatch was received at the depot from the station agent at West Peabody, announcing the fire, and Steamer 1, Hose 1 and a party of firemen under Assistant Engineer Southwick and Engineer Tibbets. The engine had four horses and made the run to Brown's store at the junction in 35 minutes, where it was decided that nothing could be done with the apparatus and it was sent back. Engineer Tibbetts and seven firemen from Steamers 1 and 2 and H. & L. 1 in H. A. Wilson's express wagon went on to the fire, which proved to be in the wood lots belonging to Mrs. Jno. King, Dan'l Southwick and Messrs. Raddin and Newhall. The fire had been burning since 12 o'clock, evidently being set on fire by gunners, and at the time the firemen arrived had spread over many acres and got into the piles of cordwood making one of the hottest fires imaginable. The firemen attempted to fight it with green boughs, but it drove them away with the intense heat, and thick black smoke. Finally a lot of hoes were obtained and a trench 500 feet long dug which effectually shut the fire off in that direction. Engineer Tibbetts sent a dispatch to town soon after he arrived at the fire requesting that more men might be sent up and a second alarm was given at 6.30. A detachment of twenty-five or thirty men with Chief Buxton and Assistant Southwick went up in Linehan's barge. They went entirely around the fire and when they left at 10 o'clock had it under control. The other party left the woods at 6.30 arriving home at 8 o'clock. It was the hottest fire the boys ever worked at. The fire spread over about 75 acres and burned between 100 and 200 cords of wood. The newly appointed Forrest Fire Warden was not present.

The fire alarm will be tested Thursday afternoon when every box will be pulled in and at some of them the fire department or parts of it will respond. George A. Collins & Co's. jewelry store has been connected with the alarm and every day at 11.45 an electric button will be pressed in the store and one stroke on the bell and one blast of the whistle will be given. This will prove that the alarm is in working order and will give the citizens the correct Harvard time.

The wagon of Hose 5 will be sent to Concord, N. H., to be painted.

The Hook & Ladder base ball nine are hunting leather with the C. H. Boodey H. & L. nine of Cochituate in that town this afternoon.

Charles R. Bailey, formerly of Steamer 1, but now living in Saylesville, R. I., is visiting in town. z

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

As an employe of Bradstreet, the ice man, was at work about the ice house the other day, a heavy rifle bullet came whizzing past his head and narrowly missed him. It came across the pond and was evidently fired by some one shooting at a mark. Such shooting is a little short of criminal.

A Peabodyite commenced to celebrate the Fourth as soon as he received his week's pay on Saturday night by getting full of rum if not patriotism, and kept it up till Monday night when he was brought home to his family in an intoxicated condition. He was put to bed up attic where it was supposed he would not disturb the peaceful slumbers of the rest of the family. Toward morning the family were aroused by hearing an unearthly cry proceeding from the attic, and on rushing up stairs they were met with a horrible spectacle. There stood the cause of all their trouble on a large trunk with a pair of suspenders tied to a beam over head and around his neck. As the family approached and realized the sickening spectacle, the would-be-suicide with a tragic wave of the hand leaped from the trunk into space, expecting he was bidding farewell to earth. But alas for human foresight! The suspenders like human beings were frail, and instead of holding him dangling in mid air they broke and he landed on his back in the middle of the floor. The shock was sufficient to sober him and the rest of the night was spent in calm and peaceful sleep. For the sake of his family we trust the next time he will secure something stronger than suspenders.

Jacob Marston, the Lynn express man, lost another horse this week, making twelve of his that have died in as many years, their value ranging from $200 to $350 each.

Last Friday the mowing machine at Jas. P. King's field was badly broken by striking against a stake which was left at the time the proposed new route for the B. & L. road was staked out. It was hid in the grass.

A servant in the employ or Doctor Geo. S. Osborne was startled last Friday afternoon by the report of a pistol and a bullet crushing through the wire screen and falling on the floor beyond. The police investigated it but could not find the owner of the pistol from which the ball was fired. It was probably not intentional but carelessness.

Mr. Benjamin Graves, living at Ayer, and a conductor of the Lowell freight, while making a coupling on Railroad Avenue, last Friday, had his left hand caught and three fingers were crushed. Doctors Weston and Foster dressed the wound and he was taken to Salem Hospital and the three fingers amputated. The index finger was not injured.

A drunken woman fell in front of the Warren Bank yesterday morning and cut a bad gash in her face. She was removed to the police station.

In the police court Tuesday morning Jerry Bresnehan for assault was fined $5 and costs. Richard Connell, second drunk, two months in the house of correction.

Charles, a young son of Peter Sim while handling a revolver, was shot through the thumb and forefinger of his left hand.

Dennis Daley, living in Proctor's Court, was shot in the hand Monday while handling a cartridge pistol.

The police called on James Tumulty and Tim Riordan on Saturday but found nothing. The delivery team of S. B. Winn & Son was seized while standing in front of Thomas Duffy's on Foster street, and the liquors confiscated. The Salem and Peabody police raided Christopher Campbell's on Shillaber street and a case of lager beer was found in the Peabody end of the house.

Some one entered the shop of Wiley & Poor last Monday and forced open a draw in the desk and stole what money was there, a little over $2 in amount.

In the police court this morning Mary Lynch, drunk, John Frizzell, drunk, Gilman W. Miller, drunk, and Edward Cassidy, drunk, were fined $1 and costs.

A venturesome swill dog tried to cross the railroad track in front of an approaching engine near Winchester & Blaney's last Saturday, and was cut in two.

Where Hours go Merrily.

The reception by the graduating class of '86 at town hall, Thursday evening, was attended by about 200. Everything passed pleasantly and the graduates received many congratulations on the close of their school year. The Salem Cadet Band furnished music.

A party of twenty-five or more of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Lloyd called at their residence on Oak street last Thursday evening to help them celebrate the twentieth anniversary of their marriage. During the evening they were presented with a beautiful hanging lamp.

Mrs. Eleazar Gould quietly celebrated her 88th birthday last Thursday. She is in her usual good health.

Mascconomo Tribe No. 11 I. O. R. M. raised up the elected and appointed chiefs at their hall last Thursday evening. The work was done by D. D. G. S., J. Peter Gardner and suite. The following were the chiefs:—Prophet, Charles A. Weare; Sachem, Ezra H. Shannon; Senior Sagamore, Charles C. Dodge; Junior Sagamore, Charles S. Goldthwait; 1st Sannap, Charles E. Galeucia; 2d Sannap, William R. Armstrong; Guard of the Wigwam, George H. Lowe; Guard of the Forest, Daniel A. Goodrich; 1st Warrior, A. D. Gray; 2d Warrior, Daniel F. Buxton; 3d Warrior, George N. Miller; 4th Warrior, Allen W. Hill; 1st Brave, George O. Nimblett: 2d Brave, Albert Trask; 3d Brave, Fred P. Osborne; 4th Brave, A. W. Porter; Past Sachems, S. S. Littlefield and Charles A. Weare were elected representatives to the Great Council. Corn and venison were served at the town hall at the close.

A party of our young people numbering twenty-five or more took a Danvers car the other evening and went up to Danvers Center and returned by the way of Salem, where they took possession of an ice cream saloon and astonished the proprietor by their ability to dispose of large quantities of the frozen feast.

On Friday of last week about sixty pupils from the three upper classes of the Wallis, Center and Bowditch schools, with about an equal number from the grammar schools of Beverly, went to Boston to sing together under Mr. Bill's direction, before the Music Teachers' National Association, which, on that day and the two days preceding, held its tenth annual meeting in Tremont Temple. The children, with several teachers accompanying them, left on the 7.25 train. Horse cars awaited the party in Boston and they were soon assembled in the Meionaon ready for an appearance before the audience in the Temple. Soon after nine o'clock Mr. Bill and the children were introduced, and several pieces with which they were familiar were sung. Then came several tests of their ability to sing at sight. A piece of music in three parts, written for the occasion, was placed in the hands of each pupil. It was sung very well and called out rounds of applause. Other tests by Dr. Mason and others were placed on a blackboard, all of which were performed with great credit to the children and their instructors. In the afternoon some very fine four part singing was presented by pupils from the Chelsea schools and then all the children united in several tests of sight singing. On the whole, aside from the interest in the singing, the children had a very enjoyable day. Their fare was paid by the association, they saw some places of interest in Boston, dined, some of them, at the Crawford House, and on the way home, with a car almost entirely to themselves, had such a right good time as only children free from restraint can have. Of the meeting as a whole it may be said that the object was to discuss matters of interest to music teachers and to present in several concerts various styles of music, both vocal and instrumental. The entire forenoon of Friday was given up to music in public schools.

The Young Women's C. T. Union, familiarly called the "Y's," propose to hold a picnic at Asbury Grove next Tuesday, the 13th. They extend an invitation to the public to accompany them on this day's outing. Tickets for the ride to and from the grove, and for tea or coffee there, forty cents, to be had of members of the organization.

According to arrangements made at the recent Sunday-school convention of the Salem Baptist Association, the twenty-five schools of the Association are enjoying a grand picnic at Centennial Grove, Essex, to-day. Music by the Reading Band. A fair attendance is present from Peabody.

The picnic of the St. Johns C. T. A. Society at Oak Island on the Fourth, was one of the most successful ever held by the society, and reflects great credit on the foresight and good management of the Committee having the matter in charge. They will probably realize $200 profit.

The Peabodys and Amesburys played an interesting game of base ball last Saturday, and the former was defeated 6 to 2

At the shoot at the Forest street Range last Monday, Geo. D. Walton won the medal from David Waters.

REPRESENTATIVE Batchelder takes exceptions to our editorial of last week concerning the causes for the prolonged session of the Legislature, and says that if the Democratic minority in the house had not spent so many valuable hours "talking against time," the session would have been considerable shorter. While Col. Batchelder did not vote for the increase of pay, he is of the opinion that in many cases it is but just. For instance, if we would not have a Legislature composed entirely of wealthy men, we must make the pay sufficiently large for the laboring man to accept the office. Those living in the vicinity of Boston can do very well, but a man from the western part of the state must remain in Boston and pay his board, and at the same time support his family at home. One member rode 70 miles each day in order to attend the meetings of the Legislature, simply because he could not neglect his business. This is only one of many instances, and no doubt influences many voters.

A woman can take the smallest drawer in a bureau for her own private use and will store in it daily, fragments of ribbon, foamy ruffles, velvet things for the neck, bundles of old love letters, pieces of jewelry, fans, things that no man knows the name of, all sorts of fresh looking, bright little articles that you couldn't catalogue in a column, and at any time she can go to that drawer and pick up any of them she wants without disturbing anything else. Whereas a man having the biggest, deepest and widest drawer assigned to him, will put into it a couple of socks, a collar box, a pack of cards, an old necktie, a pipe and a pair of braces, and to save his life he can't shut that drawer without leaving more ends of things sticking out than there are things in it.

The Fourth passed very quietly and most of our people who desired to celebrate went out of town to do so. There was very little noise in some sections of the town in the early morning and more in the other. Four car loads of people went to Danvers at 4.30 and witnessed a fine parade. Many went to the Willows and the Point of Pines, and young America celebrated with crackers mostly. The trade in fire crackers was the largest ever known and every small boy's pocket was swelled with bunches of this kind of patriotism. Crackers were much higher at wholesale this year, but the local dealers retailed them at the old price.

The Assessors are hard at work, and will probably complete their labors by the last of July. The work is being more thoroughly done this year, and there will be considerable "kicking" when the bills are presented. It has been the custom in previous years to allow certain firms to say how much tax they would pay, without regard to the amount of business they did. In other cases individuals have made a "deal" with the board, whereby they agree to pay taxes on a certain amount of personal property, provided no further questions were asked. It is time a reform was made in this direction if all reports are true.

TESTIMONIAL FROM PROF. BILL.

W. J. LEFAVOUR, Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to be able to endorse the Ivers & Pond piano. In resonance, volubility, firmness and purity of tone it will compare favorably with any piano made in the country. I heartily recommend it to the public and my friends who are intending to purchase. Yours truly, C. R. Bill, teacher of music in public schools.

A sad accident occurred at Sidney's pond about three o'clock yesterday afternoon, when a boy by the name of Sweeney was drowned. There were quite a number of boys in bathing, when three of them got on a raft, and went out into the pond. Sweeney, who was one of them, came ashore and undressed and again went out without his companions, who did not miss him till they started for home, and found his clothing, when they gave the alarm The body was recovered and taken to the shore, where the coroner was called and ordered the remains to be removed to his home on Sherman street.

The L. & B. road did a very large business last Sunday and Monday and have commenced the running of half hour cars for the rest of the season. The half hour car runs direct to Nahant Beach.

Our W. C. T. U. at its meeting last Friday adopted the following which is self-explanatory:

"Whereas, the South Congregational Sabbath School has by a timely and generous gift of twenty-five dollars aided us to cancel a portion of our burdensome debt assumed last April, therefore,

Resolved, that the Peabody Women's Christain Temperance Union gladly receive the sum, tender our grateful thanks for the same, and express to our true and tried friends in the Congregational Church our hearty appreciation of the encouragement and aid, which in many and touching ways they have bestowed upon our organization since we undertook the work of agitation and reform, that has been to us full of self-denial, sorrow and heartache, and yet has blessed our beloved town with a new and better order of things. We are charged "Bear yeone another,s burdens"—even the burdens laid by strong drink—" and thus fulfill the law of Christ." "

The water board have awarded the contract for coal to William Pickering Jr., & Co., of Salem for $4.70 a ton.

Tom Stringer has made his reputation up to its former standard by a sensational story about three of his companions being drowned.

When it comes down to keeping robins and cat-birds out of a cherry-tree or strawberry patch, the scare crow has lost its hold.

Col. Batchelder missed only three days attendance at the meeting of the legislature, and that was on account of sickness in his family.

The Massachusetts Press Association will go on its summer excursion to Newport and Block Island, next Saturday and return Wednesday.

Won't it pay to have a town meeting and accept the act, permitting the town to have precinct voting? It ought to be done in season for the fall election.

Mr. Arthur Poole and wife, Miss Nellie Allen and Miss Augusta Wilson have gone to Saratoga as delegates to the National Convention of Christian Endeavor.

Mr. Albert Carlton who was stricken down at West Peabody last week, still remains in an unconscious condition, and has not yet been removed to his home.

One of our young ladies remarking upon the eagerness of the people to take a back seat in church, and leave the front pews empty, says front seats at a circus are always in demand.

Collins Brothers have received the contract for supplying 100 tons of Cumberland coal for the court house and jails at $4.30; 250 tons of broken white ash coal at $4.75; 75 tons of screened stove coal at $5.50, all per long ton 2240 pounds.

Mr. David Roach has a dog that is worth having. Mr. Roach is the owner of a goat, and the dog goes out with the goat in the morning, and stays with her till she comes home at night. He won't allow the goat to stray into the gardens or pastures, nor allow any other dog to bother her.

Many persons are of the opinion that stamps of an unsuitable denomination to them are exchangeable at postoffices for other stamps to suit. This is a mistake, such exchanges being positively prohibited by the laws, regulations and rulings of the Postoffice Department.

As an exchange puts it, now comes the time of year when the small boy with torn pants and a sore toe seats himself on the limb of a cherry tree, and proceeds to resolve his little stomach into a cemetery for the final resting place of the seductive looking cherry and its living occupant.

We are informed that the W. C. T. U. now lack nearly $40 of the amount needed to pay for the furnishings they took with Franklin Hall. The organization keeps steadily at work in all seasons and all weathers, and deserve that this debt should be speedily lifted.

The Newburyport Herald says the Victor Manufacturing Company, Irving Besse Secretary, which purchased the Bayley wharf property, have received their boiler, made in Lowell, and the boiler house is being erected for its reception. The wooden building which they will soon vacate, in the rear of the Ross block will be occupied by the Wilder & Co., shoe firm, in addition to their present quarters.

The watermelon trade has opened briskly, Georgia melons sell here at 50 cents each. This is the best watermelon that reaches us without doubt, being more reliable than the Jersey or Long Island fruit, or even the home product. Georgia melons were a little hazardous years ago, when they came by boat to New York, but, now they are handled as carefully as peaches and come through in three days and nights, their ripeness is not a matter of guesswork.

USE

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

It is a medicinal preparation, and, at the same time, an elegant and cleanly toilet article. Its action upon the scalp is healthful. It nourishes the glands which support the hair, and causes thin, dry hair to become thick, soft, and vigorous. It restores the color of youth to locks which have become faded with age or disease; and relieves and cures itching, caused by humors of the scalp. Dr. George Gray, Nashua, N. H., writes: "It gives me pleasure to testify to the wonderful effects produced by Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, as observed by me in very many cases. IT WILL CERTAINLY RESTORE THE HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR. It cleanses the head of dandruff, and leaves the hair soft, glossy, and beautiful." F. T. Sandhein, 1010 Spruce st., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "After unavailingly trying a number of preparations to prevent my hair from falling out, and, realizing that I was fast becoming bald, I tried, as a last resort, Hall's Hair Renewer. I have used only four bottles of the Renewer, and am perfectly satisfied that it is the best preparation in the market for checking the falling out of hair, invigorating the hair roots, and promoting a new growth."

RICHARD K. FOX,

FRANKLIN SQUARE, N. Y.

A PARISIAN SALON.

Madame Mohl's saloon stood out in strong relief, with a character entirely its own. It was a permanent protest against the spirit and tendency of the day; against pretension, purse-pride, and vulgarity in every form. While it was being loudly proclaimed by high and low that luxury had rendered quiet sociability impossible, that the pleasures of conversation were a thing of the past, unless you could "entertain" in the modern sense of the word, as one would come to you, this old woman without rank or fortune, living in high-perched, shabbily-furnished rooms, without suppers or chandeliers, enjoyed a position unrivalled in its way, and contrived to attract to her house all that was best worth having in Paris. By the sole magnet of her esprit she drew around her the most remarkable personalities, not only of France, but of the world. Celebrities from every capital in Europe gave one another rendezvous at Madame Mohl's Friday evenings and Wednesday afternoons. And strangers, who, hearing of this salon, had been at pains to get an introduction there, and sometimes taken by surprise when they entered it for the first time. They found a few quiet people, chiefly gentlemen, and most of them elderly, "making conversation" by the light of a couple of lamps, which modest illumination was dimmed by green shades for M. Mohl's eyes. The one luxury of the room was a great many very comfortable armchairs of all shapes and sizes. It was a notion of Madame Mohl's that people could not talk their best unless they were comfortably seated. "I like my friends to be snug when they are talking," she would explain, if she noticed a curious glance wandering over the motely gathering of fauteuils. * * * Her contemporary, Madame Swetchine, had some good talk in her drawing-room, and only discovered a few days before her death that she had made her friends "do penance," as she sweetly said in apologizing for it, on hard chairs for thirty years.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Alexander Hamilton, when Secretary of the Treasury, had an indiscreet flirtation with the wife of one of his clerks, who successfully blackmailed him. His political opponents heard of it and started a rumor that he was speculating in stocks through the clerk.

When this came to Hamilton's ears, he published an account of the whole transaction in a pamphlet, admitting that he had been the dupe of a designing woman and her rascally husband, but denying that, while Secretary of the Treasury, he had speculated in stocks, basing his operations on his inside knowledge of government finances. In an appendix he published the letters of his fair friend, leaving uncorrected her queer blunders in spelling; as, for example, when she wrote that she hoped soon "to see her dear Col. harmilton, she is alone, and begs he will rite to her whos greatest fault Is Lovin' him, and clear up her doubts."

The publication of this pamphlet gave Mrs. Hamilton great sorrow, and when she came to Washington to live in her old age, she had purchased a considerable portion of the edition from second-hand book-sellers, paying them a dollar for each copy. All at once she began to receive a dozen or even more every week, and it leaked out that a New York book-monger had caused the reprinting of the pamphlet, thus receiving a dollar for what had cost him eight or ten cents. There is a copy of the original pamphlet in the Congressional Library at Washington.

CULTIVATING PEANUTS.

If any of our readers desire to indulge in growing their own peanuts, they can do so by giving to any dry soil a thorough pulverization and fertilization with decomposed stable manure. Let the surface be even, and plant about the time of planting beans, getting fresh and unbaked nuts, which should be removed from the shell. Plant in hills from two-and-one-half to three feet apart, two kernels in each hill, so as to insure at least one plant to every hill. The surplus can be transplanted. When they come up keep clean by hoeing. This is fully as necessary as with other crops. When they begin to run and show blossoms the vines should be covered with earth, blossoms and all, to a depth of about an inch, leaving the ends of the vines just out of the ground. With good cultivation the vines will grow rapidly and the earthing operation continued. They will continue to grow until frost comes, and then, as soon as the leaves are touched, they should be lifted from the ground, leaving the nuts clinging to the vines, in which condition they must be thoroughly dried, seeing to it that they do not mould or are destroyed by rats or mice. With good culture and luck a quart may be gathered from a single plant; so if the farmers' boys wish to grow their own, either for use or a few hills as a curiosity, there is no great difficulty attending the operation.

100 Doses One Dollar is inseparably connected with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is true of no other medicine. It is an unanswerable argument as to strength and economy, while thousands testify to its superior blood purifying and strengthening qualities. A bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla contains 100 doses and will last a month, while others will average to last not over a week. Hence, for economy, buy Hood's Sarsaparilla.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Waiting.

When all the happy woods and hills
Are filled with summer's melodies,
When the cold hand of winter stills
The rippling streams, the whispering trees,
My heart unchanged sings still one song,
"My love, my love," the whole year long.

For all the mystery of life,
The hope of dawn, the night's despair,
The greed of gain, the lust of strife,
And grinding want and gnawing care,
Lie drowned beneath the sunlit sea
Of my great joy—she loveth me.

The summer winds that come and go,
Laughing about the shady ways,
The waters in their ebb and flow
Have still one voice through all the days;
"Love mocks at time, love laughs at fate!"
I wait because she bids me wait.

Nor would I wonder if she came,
In any place on any day,
From out the sunlet's crimson flame,
Or down the morning's misty way;
Nor dream it more nor find it less,
The marvel of her loveliness.

Mr. James M. Nixon, who knows all about a circus, says: "There are no people excepting plainsmen—the skirmishers over the wild country of the West—who live as hard a life as circus employes, both performers and workingmen. Their life is not so hard now, it is true, as it was some years ago, excepting with the small concerns. They are the 'wagon shows,' that travel through the small towns. But even with the big concerns that travel by train it is hard enough now.

"Take the case of a wagon show that has to travel thirty miles after a night's performance to get to the next town, where a street procession is to be made in the forenoon. The workmen, canvasmen and the like have to take breakfast at 11 o'clock at night. Then they get no meal till dinner, after the procession is over, say at noon. Wherever they are the work must be attended to first, and eating is a second consideration. With the performers, gymnasts, riders, clowns and the like, it is not so bad. They get better pay and better food. As a rule they live on the best food there is to be had where they happan to be, and they take a great deal of it. Most of them are great beef eaters, and are not very particular whether the meat is cold or hot, so long as it is good and plenty. They are very particular, however, about cleanliness. I have seen twenty or thirty of them get up and leave the table because the tablecloth was dirty; and when they want a meal they want it, and will have it. I have often seen them leave a hotel when they would have to wait fifteen minutes for a dinner that was paid for, and go to a restaurant where they would have to buy another. They wont eat unless they are hungry; but they are always hungry after a night performance, and will not go to bed without a hearty supper. They say they can't sleep if they are empty.

"One thing that is peculiar about them is that they do not take medicine, and they are remarkably healthy. When they are out of sorts they diet themselves, each one according to his own ideas, but I don't think I ever saw $50 worth of medicine around a circus in all the years I have been in the business. Yes, they drink. Not to excess, but nearly all of them drink when they feel like it. They never drink, however, before performance. They are very careful of themselves. They have to be, or they would not last long.

"As a matter of course, with their irregular habits, they are, in a certain sense, extravagant. Their extravagance, however, is mainly in the matter of eating. Experience teaches them very soon, if their own sense does not at first, that they must take the very best possible care of themselves physically, and that good eating is a primary consideration."

There has been in late years a vast improvoment in all departments of the traveling circus, and in nothing has this been more observable, to those in the business, than in the provisions made for the health and comfort of the employes. A good chief cook with a circus will get as good a salary as a first-class performer, and has to earn it.

A FRENCH CONSCRIPT.

The life of the conscript of the French army is not always a happy one. Aubin, a private in the artillery regiment stationed at Vannes, was terrorstruck every time he was required to mount a horse. The sergeant-instructor, in despair of ever teaching him to ride, asked the captain of his battery what he was to do. The captain who bears the name of Bazine, ordered that the man should be tied to his horse. These directions were carried out with such hearty good will that not only were his legs tied, but his hands were fastened together with hay-bands; and it is even asserted that a strap was put around his neck. His horse was then started in a gallop. Unfortunately, Aubin appeared to have been as bad at saddling his horse as he was at riding it, and the animal had no sooner started than the saddle turned round and he was thrown with great violence to the ground, striking his head and cutting it open in the fall. Such obstinate stupidity evidently deserved severe punishment. The spectators could not restrain their indignation, and a corporal gave vent to his feelings by thrashing the prostrate man with his whip. After justice had been thus satisfied Aubin was removed to the cell in a hand-barrow. On his arrival there a couple of pails of water were thrown over him to restore him to consciousness. But further restorative proceedings were, unfortunately interrupted by the man's death.

WE ARE THE MANUFACTURERS AGENTS
FOR THE

Buckeye Mower,

and for efficiency, simplicity and durability it stands unrivalled. It contains fewer pieces and less gearing, is therefore easier to keep in repair, and is less liable to injury than any other machine. It is constructed on sound mechanical principles, and with the hardened steel

CHAFE PLATES
AND THE PITMAN FENDER,

it well deserves its reputation as the Standard Mower of America,

The Bullard Hay Tedder,

is the only Tedder that has stood the test of time. A special feature of this machine (found in no other) is that the forks extend outside of the wheels, thus no tedded hay is run over and matted down, and the forks never become clogged in heavy grass.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST

The Tiger Rake.

In the eight years it has been before the public, it has distanced all its competitors. It is the only Hay Rake in actual use that has proved itself strong enough to stand all the tests of a SELF-DUMP HORSE HAY RAKE. It is the BEST RAKE EVER PUT UPON THE MARKET both for the superiority of its work, its unequalled construction and durability and the variety of work to which it can be applied. We also have in stock the

WALTER A. WOOD MOWER

This machine has been greatly improved. Its special advantages are its lightness and better distribution of weight.

We carry the largest stock of AGRICULTURAL and HAYING TOOLS in Essex Co., and as we buy directly from the manufacturers, we guarantee our price to be as low as the lowest and we are bound to sell. Please give us a call and examine our stock before purchasing. Remember we guarantee satisfaction in every respect.

HOUSEKEEPING IN JAPAN.

A lady writing from Japan says: "Housekeeping here has no trials. The worn and vexed spirits of American chatelaines ought to rest in Japan after death. Capable and faithful servants are plenty and cheap. Our establishment boasts five, and for these we pay about what two would cost in New York. I do not visit my kitchen once a month, never give an order outside of a spoken wish, yet the domestic machinery moves with an ease and perfection unattainable at home by almost any effort on the part of the mistress. The manners of the servants are amusing, not to say startling, to an American accustomed to the cheerful familiarity of her native help. Every night at bedtime our five retainers appear, prostrate themselves in succession to the earth, and retire. This is to wish me good night and to renew their testimony of profound respect and pleasure over the privilege of serving me. It was difficult at first to preserve the necessary dignity for the ceremony, but now I am as majestically gracious as any other potentate. The other day, on one of my rare visits to the kitchen, a hairpin became loosened and dropped without my notice. I had been seated in my room only a few moments when my houseman entered, bearing a small salver, which he presented to me with many genuflections. Fancy my surprise to see a little hairpin upon it, and to learn from my proud but embarrassed servitor that it had fallen to the kitchen floor from my head. Afterward I found there had been a discussion as to who should pick it up, and almost a quarrel as to whom belonged the inestimable honor of bearing it to its owner!"

THE BOATS OF GOLD.

The Museum of the Northern Antiquities in Copenhagen has just been enriched by a remarkable discovery made at a small place near Thisted, on the West coast of Jutland, Denmark. Two men digging in a gravel pit in the neighborhood of an old burial mound, called Thor's Mound, struck an earthen vessel with their picks, disclosing a number of gold pieces. On examination it was found that an earthen vessel of about seven inches diameter at the rim, and covered with a flat stone, had been buried about a foot and a half below the surface, and this had contained about a hundred little golden boats, curiously worked, varying in size from three to four and a half inches. A gunwale and frames of thin strips of bronze had first been formed, and these had been covered with thin gold plates, some of which were further ornamented with impressions of concentric rings. The boats, of which only a few are in a fair state of preservation, are tapered at both ends, and resemble the Danish fishing craft of the present day.

This discovery, which may be regarded as a deposited treasure of votic offerings, and belongs doubtless to the close of the bronze age, proves that frame built vessels were already known at that time, and that man was not satisfied with the hollowed-out trunks of trees. The gold of which these little fishing models are composed was valued at twenty-seven pounds, which amount, together with a gratuity, has been forwarded to the finders, who are both poor men.

LONDON STOCK BROKERS.

The sworn brokers of the city of London are only admitted to the Stock Exchange after the most careful inquiry as to their antecedents; according to the rules, candidates for election must be recommended by three members of not less than four years standing, each one of whom must have personal knowledge of the applicant and of his circumstances, and who engage to pay £500 each to his creditors in case he becomes a defaulter within four years from the date of his admission. The entrance fee is £105 and the annual subscription £22 1s. If, however, the candidate has been a clerk in the Stock Exchange for four years previous to his application, in which case his character is well known, he requires two sureties only for £300, and his entrance fee is reduced to £63, the annual subscription being the same. The members are divided into brokers and jobbers or dealers; the former buying and selling for the public, the latter speculating on their own account. The brokers have also to take out a license from the Corporation of London under very heavy penalties; but this does not give them a right of admission to the Exchange. Defaulting brokers are most severely dealt with, being expelled from the Stock Exchange, and their expulsion is advertised in the daily papers.

A NEVADA BORAX FIELD.

Teel's marsh, in Nevada, is the most productive borax field on the Pacific coast. Its deposits cover ten square miles of surface, and it is said to include chemically pure common salt, borax in three forms, sulphate of soda and carbonate of soda. The basin of Nevada, in which it is situated, is covered in many parts with dry, effervescent salts, washed in course of ages from the soda feldspar of the volcanic rocks and ridges of yellow lava which cover the country for miles. The waters of the lakes are heavy, appear like thin oil, smell like soap, possess great detersive qualities, are caustic as potash, and easily saponify.

The striking of the new fire alarm began to-day.

THE WHISTLING TREE.

In Naubia and the Soudan groves a species of acacia grows whose scientific appellation, as well as its popular name, is derived from a peculiar sound emitted by the branches when swayed by the wind, the Arabic name is the "soffa," or pipe, and the specific name of fistulia, also meaning a pipe, has been given to it for the same reason which prompted the natives to give it its local designation. The tree is invested with insects, whose eggs are deposited in the young shoots and extremities of the branches. A sort of gall-like excresence, about an inch in diameter is produced at the base of these shoots, and when larva has emerged from this nidus, it leaves a small circular hole, the action of the wind in which causes it to produce a whistling sound like that produced by a flute or by blowing any hollow pipe. When the wind is violent, the noise caused by thousands of these natural flutes in a grove of acacias is most remarkable. The description given by Dr. Schweinfurth of these bladder-like galls leaves it uncertain whether they are true gall-nuts or whether they are the secretion of a species of lac insects. The valuable lac insect thrives on two or three species of acacia, while one variety (the A. Arabica) also produces a pod or gall-nut, which is useful for tanning. In either case, these natural "whistles" of the whistling tree would form a valuable article of commerce if they could be easily and regularly collected and exported.

KENTUCKY FERTILITY.

Maize and pumpkin and bears grow together in a field—a triple crop. Nature perfects them all, yet must do more. Scarcely have the ploughs left the long furrows before there springs up a varied wild growth, and a fourth crop, morning glories, festoon the tall tassels against the stalk. Harvest fields usually have their stubble well hidden by a rich, deep aftermath. Garden patches, for all that persistent hoe and rake can do, commonly look at last like spots given over to weeds and grasses. Sidewalks quickly lose their borders. Pavements would soon disappear from sight; the winding of a distant stream through the fields can be readily followed by the line of communistic vegetation that rushes there to fight for life, from the minutest creeping vines to forest trees. Every neglected fence corner becomes an area for a fresh colony. Leave one of these a short period of years, it runs wild with a dense young natural forest; vines shoot up to the top of the tallest trees, and then tumble over in green sprays on the heads of the others. A kind, true, patient, self-helpful soil if ever there was one.

MAKING A LIST.

It is not a wonder to anyone who thinks about it how the Speaker is able in a week or ten days to assign 335 men to fifty committees without giving one man too much or omitting to employ somebody. The work is done so systematically, however, that it is only by a gross blunder that anybody is altogether omitted in the distribution of places. The Speaker begins by setting up a chart ruled one way for fifty places, and at right angles to those lines are 335 others corresponding to the number of members and delegates. As a man is assigned a check is made in the space over the name and a committee line inserted. As the work progresses the Speaker can see at a glance who has been chosen and who is to be provided for. When a change is made, the checks are rubbed out and the transfer made by more checks in other places. While members are not supposed to ask for places, they do it, and the expression of preference, though not quite proper, in a strict sense, is helpful to the Speaker in furnishing members with congenial occupation. A certain degree of caution is observed in refusing to put men on committees when they are too seemingly concerned about pet schemes to come before them.

OUR MOON.

A widespread legend of great antiquity informs us that the moon is inhabited by a man with a bundle of sticks on his back, who has been exiled thither for many centuries, and is so far off that he is beyond the reach of death. This tradition, which has given rise to so many superstitions, is still preserved, under various forms, in most caunteries; but it has not been decided who the culprit originally was and how he came to be imprisoned. Dante calls him Cain; Chaucer assigns his exile as a punishment for theft, and gives him a thorn bush to carry, while Shakespeare loads him with thorns, but by way of compensation gives him a dog for a companion.

HOW TO BRUSH THE TEETH.

This is a matter of no small importance. Most people brush across the teeth from right to left. This manner of brushing will not remove the accumulations from beneath them, but tends rather to force the debris into the interstices. The brush should be placed against the teeth at the gums, and rotated toward the masticating surfaces. It will thus act somewhat like a bundle of fine tooth-picks. In order to make the work effectual, the brush should be applied, as described, both inside and outside of the teeth, and also upon the grinding surfaces of the double teeth.

If you have not a time table for your watch get one at this office.

ALL ABOUT MOLASSES.

Even molasses is no longer pure, grocers confess; although not one retailer in ten will purchase mixed molasses, knowing it to be such; nine-tenths of the mixed molasses sold has, as a matter of fact, been sold by deception—that is, palmed off as pure goods. The mixed goods, of course, make a much brighter, more stylish line of mollasses than the pure; but this fancied superiority lies only in the appearance of the goods. How as to quality? Well, the mixed stuff has so disgusted consumers that there has actually been danger of the molasses trade being driven out of this part of the country. The mixture of molasses, glucose, acids, waters, etc., has been highly dissatisfactory to housekeepers, is driving molasses out of request, and compelling more and more the use of sugar. In the city of New York, the consumer can hardly find a quart of pure New Orleans molasses. He may go into the very best grocery stores—places where he expects to find pure goods—and though the clerks will swear that they have the pure unadulterated article, and undertake to prove it by asking such a price as the pure should be sold at, he cannot get it. It looks good, is a little thin, of course, but you are told that it is all on account of the unusually warm weather; it is sent home, and the lover of the good old standard New Orleans finds, to his disgust, when about to use it, that he has been sold. The country merchant has better luck, because New Orleans is more used in the country than in the cities, and the merchants very seldom get stuck with the adulterated article; and never a second time. The finest grades of Porto Rico resemble New Orleans, and we are told that some of the Porto Rico manufacturers purchase barrels at New Orleans to pack their stock in, so that the buyer in this country will take it for the genuine. It is not the genuine article, however, but far superior to the vile mixtures that contain glucose, acids and water.

THREE GREAT COMPOSERS.

Auber was sometimes surprised at the grandeur of his fame. He was modesty itself, and it is rather amusing to compare him to another composer, a contemporary of his, Spontini, who at a dress rehearsal of one of his operas (I believe it was "Olympia") appeared at the desk in grand costume, covered with all the decorations he was favored with. Approaching the desk slowly and majestically, he elevated the baton, fixed his eagle eyes on the orchestra and chorus, and spoke as follows: "Gentlemen, the work which we are going to have the honor of performing is a masterpiece. Now then!" Auber seemed to be always providing for a rainy day. He perpetually noted down motives. Then, when he had an opera to write, he took his sketch books and there chose among the thousands of notes what he wanted. He used to say that the difficulty for him was not to get millions, but to know how properly to spend them or use them. So long as there is a question of musical notes that may be so, but if there should be a question of bank notes, it seems to me the case is the reverse—a much greater difficulty how to accumulate millions than to spend them. It is clear that, with so many operas pouring from his ever-ready pen, he occupied a greater number of singers, and he had always something soothing to say, even when he was not particularly pleased; for instance, of Ricquier, who used to sing with a downright intonation, he said: "Ricquier sings between the keys of the piano." Berlioz did not use such kid gloves when he had something to say against a singer. He wrote about Duprez, whose perpetual eclats de voix broke at last even his steel organ, although he had for thirteen years tyrannized over the opera without anybody daring to say what everybody was hinting: "Duprez shouts so that it hurts the chest of the audience."

LANGUAGE OF FEATURES.

With the astrologers a large nose was always a sign of much character of some kind, but what, was determined by other characteristic marks. A Roman nose was a sign of a courageous temper and a disposition to face and overcome difficulties, while a more strongly aquiline nose was an indication of rapacity; the idea being evidently borrowed from the similarity of this description of beak to that of the eagle, the most rapacious of birds. The snub-nose showed little character but much temper, while the Greek nose, even, straight and regular, was a sign of the temperament of the owner. Large nostrils indicated good lungs, health and long life, while swelling nostrils showed a warlike spirit and fire. A very sharp nose was considered an indication of a busy-body, while a bluntness at the end of this member was an outward sign of the possessor's mental lack of acuteness. Large ears were always bad, the similarity between their owner and the donkey being supposed to extend further than the ears, while small ears were always good. The lobe of the ear passing insensibly into the cheek was a sure sign of a thief and liar, while an exceedingly sharp division between the two indicated honesty and candor. Thick ears meant thick brains, while thin, delicate ears declared their possessor to be a man of refined intelligence.

The Third Annual Picnic of the Essex Universalist Sunday School Union is held at Centennial Grove to-day, and a large number of the society have gone. The fare was placed at sixty-five cents each, but through the benevolence of members of the parish a fund was raised toward expenses which reduced the price to the children 25 and adults 50 cents. The Salem Cadet Band furnish Music.

Mrs. H. O. Wiley whom we have spoken of before as being in critical health passed away at her home near the Universalist church yesterday morning Her sickness has been a long one, but she has been a patient sufferer and for some time realized that the end was not far off. She was a native of Danvers and was about 56 years of age. She leaves one daughter, Miss Kittie Wiley, a teacher in the Centre school.

Poet's Corner.

The Ivy.

The ivy in a dungeon grew,
Unfed by rain, uncheered by dew;
The pallid leaflets only drank
Cave-moistures foul and odors dank.

But through the dungeon grating high
There fell a sunbeam from the sky;
It slept upon the grateful floor
In silent gladness evermore.

The ivy felt a tremor shoot
Through all its fibres to the root;
It felt the light, it saw the ray,
It strove to blossom into day.

It grew, it crept, it pushed, it clomb—
Long had the darkness been its home;
But well it knew, though veiled in night,
The goodness and the joy of light.

It reached the beam, it thrilled, it curled,
It blessed the warmth that cheers the world;
It rose toward the dungeon bars,
It looked upon the sun and stars.

It felt the life of bursting spring,
It heard the happy skylarksing;
It caught the breath of morns and eves,
And wooed the swallow to its leaves.

By rains and dews and sunshine fed,
Over the outer wall it spread;
And, in the daybeam waving free,
It grew into a steadfast tree.

Woulds't know the moral of the rhyme?
Behold the heavenly light, and climb!
To every dungeon comes a ray
Of God's interminable day.

My Heaven.

Not in some far-off clime it lies,
 Beyond some distant central sun;
My heaven is my Baby's eyes
 That draw me toward that other one.
None like them find I anywhere
(Unless they be his mother's there!)

The poets of the Book divine
 Have woven fancies wondrous sweet
Of jasper walls, and crystalline
 New seas, and such a radiant street
Of purest gold, and thrones, and songs,
And countless white-robed, happy throngs.

But these are very far away.
 And Baby eyes are close at hand;
Their shining makes a perfect day;
 I gaze in them and understand
How warriors bold and savants wise
Might cow before a Baby's eyes!

Sometimes I cannot let him sleep,
 The closed eyes darken so the day:
And oh! such faithful watch I keep
 To catch the first inspiring ray
From depths, as pure as Paradise,
That lie within my Baby's eyes!

The Holy One of Galilee
 Took little children to his breast,
And said: "Of such my heaven shall be."
 And so I find a wholesome rest
In all these tender, human ties,
That center in a Baby's eyes.

Billets Doux.

She was a winsome country lass,'
 So William, on a brief vacation,
More pleasantly the time to pass,
 Essayed flirtation.
And as they strolled in twilight dim,
 While near the time of parting drew,
Asked if she'd like to have from him
 A billet doux.

Of French this simple maid knew naught,
 But, doubting not 'twas something nice,
Upon its meaning quickly thought,
 Then in a trice
Upward she turned her pretty head;
 Her rosy lips together drew
For purpose plain, and coyly said,
 "Yes, Billy, do!"

ENVOY.

And William did!

Selected Story.

Beyond the Gate.

Two dimpled hands the bars of iron grasped;
 Two blue and wondering eyes the space looked through.
This massive gate a boundary had been set,
 Nor was she ever known but to be true.

Strange were the sights she saw across the way—
 A little child had died some days before—
And as she watched, amid the silence hushed,
 Some carried flowers, some a casket bore.

The little watcher at the garden gate
 Grew tearful, hers such thoughts and wonderings were,
Till said the nurse: "Come here, dear child,
 Weep not.
 We all must go. 'Tis God has sent for her."

"If he should send for me"—thus spoke the child—
 "I'll have to tell the angel, 'Do not wait,
Though God has sent for me, I cannot come,
 I never go beyond the garden gate.'"

Secret of my Footstool.

My brother gave his work a final polish, and then viewed the valuable articles approvingly before placing them in their softly-padded case.

"Think they look well, little woman?" he asked.

"I think they do, indeed," I answered, in unqualified admiration, for Ted was a capital workman, and had mended the pretty trinkets very skillfully. "I am sure Mr. Bailey will be pleased. The owner herself would be puzzled to detect where she damaged them."

Ted smiled; then, as he did not intend to take them back to the shop until the return of his employer, which would not be till the morrow, he deposited both the jeweled bracelets in his customary "non-burglar-proof safe," as he jokingly called a small, strong, square box which he had fitted with lock and key, padded inside and out, and covered with chintz to match our sofa. He made use of this as a footstool, saying that evil-disposed persons would be the less likely to examine it; and many a jest he had about his placing gems under my feet, and about me being a small person with a high mind, for I set my foot upon gold, and the like nonsense. Dear old Ted! He was so clever at his trade, and so trustworthy, that he had always more work than he could get through. He was very fond of me—his poor little crippled sister—would never allow me to sit too long at my needle, and shared with me in every possible way the little duties necessitated by our humble menage; so he and I jogged along very peaceably. We lodged in two rooms in a quiet street on the outskirts of Bridgepool. Our landlady was a kindly old body who had known our parents long before either Ted or I found ourselves on this world's stage.

Having put away the bracelets safely, my brother next packed up three or four watches he had been busy setting to rights, and prepared to go to the shop in Bridgepool which usually employed him. I watched him putting on his overcoat, for the day was very cold; but he seemed slow in his movements, and I thought he was reluctant to leave me alone, for, though I was generally active enough, considering my infirmity, one of my bad spells was now on me, when, as he knew, I found moving about a pain and a difficulty for some days. It happened, too, that Mrs. Brown—our landlady—had gone out for the day—a very rare occurrence.

"Can I do anything else for you before I go?" he asked.

"No, Ted, dear, thank you."

"Make sure; look round and see if everything is put handy for you," said my brother, placing my crutch a little nearer.

"Everything," I replied, cheerfully. "And I've such a lot of work to get through, I shall find the afternoon short."

"I don't half like your being left alone so long, for I may not be back before five," said Ted, eyeing me dubiously. "Cousin Milly would come round if I asked her."

"Yes, and bring her baby, who would hinder my work sadly. I don't like babies when I am busy. Go away, Ted, you dear old fellow! Don't bother about me—I shall be all right."

"Well, by-by, little woman," he said, stooping to kiss me; "I'll be home as soon as I can. "And, Bessie," he added, pausing in the doorway, "be sure you don't touch the window to-day. The sash line snapped this morning. I must send a carpenter to see to it. You will remember?"

I promised that I would, and my brother departed. I heard him go down stairs and shut the street door. At first the unusual quiet of the house was rather depressing; but I soon became too much engrossed in sewing to pay attention to that and stitched away busily at some things I was completing for a lady who was kind enough to praise my needlework, preferring it, as many did, to machine-stitched articles.

Presently I thought I heard a slight noise down stairs, like the opening of a window, but as all remained quiet afterward, I put it down to my imagination, and went on tranquilly with my work.

After some time I was started to hear a step, stealthy, but distinctly audible on the landing outside, while under the door appeared the shadow of some one moving.

"Perhaps Mrs. Brown has returned," was the thought in my mind as I sat gazing at the door; but then I turned cold with fear, for the handle was turned softly, and a strange man looked in—a young man, with a pallid, greasy, leering face, ornamented by a thievish looking twist of hair on each side, while a limp cap of semi-military cut was stuck rakishly on the side of his head.

I noticed these details mechanically as I sat petrified with surprise and fright, and I also noticed that his long dirty neck was without tie or collar, a shabby frock coat being buttoned up to his chin, and that his dirtier hands sported more than one ring.

This individual, after darting a swift glance around the room, slipped in and locked the door, saying:

"Slick! Popsy-wopsy, don't be frightened! I'm not going to hurt you—not a bit of it! But, you see——. Stop that!" he growled; for, as he approached me, I recovered myself a little, and gave a good loud scream.

Quick as thought he had his hand over my mouth, holding my chin and nose in such a manner that I was nearly suffocated; then he gave me a shake, saying:

"If you do that again, I'll pay you out, you little fool! There—she is going to be nice and quiet now, ain't she? A picter of good behavior, I calls her!"

Talking thus, he gagged me dexterously with some of my work—which, however, was pleasanter than his hand—ugh, that grimy hand!—on my mouth, and then producing some cord from his pocket, and in a minute or two I was—poor little feeble thing—bound hand and foot in my chair.

He grinned at me as he remarked:

"Now, you know, ducky, I wouldn't have served you so if you'd have the sense to keep quiet. I never could bear to be rough to the ladies—never! But time is short, and you might have been hard to persuade; so perhaps it is the best way, after all."

While speaking thus, the flippant rascal kept running his eyes around our neat little room. I read disdain in his glance, and at that moment a suspicion darted into my mind that he had come with the object of stealing some of Ted's work—perhaps the jeweled bracelets which then were under my feet. With this thought there came to me a firm resolve to save my brother such a loss, if I possibly could; ay, even though I had to endure tortures, I would not speak. I set my teeth hard and watched the man. His wandering glances soon reverted to me.

"Look here, dear, if I loosen this cloth a bit, and you take breath, will you speak to me nicely? Only don't scream again. It makes me quite nervous to hear you scream, and can't do no good." How well I knew that, in a back room in a quiet street! "There, ain't it much more comfortable?"—loosening the cloth. "Tell me now, popsy, your brother's got some vallybles here, ain't he?"

I shook my head.

"Oh, but he has, so you needn't jog your noddle like that. Better tell me where he's put them. It will save lots of time, and be more pleasant for you."

But I only shook my head the more.

"Did you ever see sich stubborness?" muttered the fellow, tying up my mouth again. "I am afeerd I shall have to make you speak directly. But I never like to be unkind to the ladies, unless they drive me to it—oh, never!"

Saying this he began an examination of the apartment, proceeding in what, as I suppose, would be described by a "professional" as the "best style;" anyway, his movements were characterized by extraordinary celerity. Within a few minutes he had gone to the bottom of every drawer and box in the room, and also turned out the sofa-bedstead where Ned slept at night. A pretty litter he made of it all! But he had not yet discovered the secret of my footstool. Can any one imagine what I endured as I sat there, helpless as a poor little Chinese "joss," the cold perspiration of fear on my forehead, while I asked myself: "What will the fellow do next?"

He turned round while proceeding with the search and, looking at me, said:

"Hallo, Poppet, how pale you are! Ain't going to faint, are you? Oh! don't faint, for I shall want you to talk to me a bit. I'll open the window and give you a mouthful of fresh air. This room is precious close."

He went to the window—the window which dear Ted had cautioned me not to touch that morning—unfastened the catch and would have let down the upper part; but he was saved the trouble, for, the cord being broken, down, quick as a shot, came the window, and, as luck would have it, caught his eight fingers tight between the upper and middle frames.

The pain and the shock must have been dreadful, the window-frame being a wide and very heavy one. He uttered a howl, then kicked frantically; but all was in vain. There he stood, with hands held aloft, caught in as nice a trap as could have been devised for an evil-door.

Then he glanced at me, and the sight of me, "picter of good behavior" that I was, must have filled his soul with remorse, since through his own act I was rendered powerless to assist him. He whined, however.

"Can't you help me?"

As it was impossible for me willingly to look on while a fellow-creature suffered such anguish as I knew he must be enduring, I used every effort to get free, but vainly. He had tied me too firmly for that. He took to kicking again, and began to swear horribly. May I never again hear such language as I was forced to listen to that afternoon.

His hands soon swelled, and I saw some drops of blood trickle slowly down the panes, the rings he wore on his dirty fingers having been forced into his flesh. The piercing air, which rushed in freely through the wide apartment, must have greatly aggravated his suffering. I know I was nearly frozen. And all this time the American clock on the mantlepiece kept ticking off the moments tranquilly, as though to assure me that time could not be hurried into a quicker pace by any consideration of human distress.

Imagine what two hours in such a situation meant for both of us! Two hours! I think the poor wretch at the window fainted; but the horrible dragging of his body on his poor maimed hand roused him directly. Trembling with cold and commiseration, I sat watching him, the tears rolling down my cheeks. Oh, why had I refused Ted's kind proposal to send Cousin Milly to me? Why had I been so captious about her dear little baby? Better a room full of babies, all doing their worst, than——

But here I swooned, and fell, chair and all, on the rug before the cold grate, the fire having died out long since.

Just on the hour of three I became conscious of a dull thud below, which I knew to be a knock at the street door. I lay listening, but rather lay wondering vaguely what would happen next than taking any interest in things of this life, from which I seemed in a manner to have floated away.

After a moment I heard steps plodding up stairs, and a loud cherry voice, which I recognized as that of our old friend, Mr. Joy, the carpenter, called out:

"Hilloa! Anybody at home!"

Coming to our room door, he knocked, then turned the handle, but of course found it locked. Being unable to speak, I yet tried to groan, and made some inarticulate noises, but I could hardly hope the old man heard them, as he was somewhat deaf. As for my companion in misfortune, one would suppose he would gladly have hailed a prison as an escape from such a plight as he was in, and so, no doubt, he would, only he had no choice at that moment, having gone off again in a heavy swoon.

I heard the carpenter go down stairs, and hopes of relief died away in my breast. Oh, Joy, Joy, why did you come to mock me thus? Two more hours probably before Ted will be home! Shall I be alive by then? My bound and aching limbs were on the rack of pain; I lay and sobbed miserably. But hark! A shout from the back garden!

"What the dickens is all this?"

Again I heard the voice of Joy.

It appeared that the carpenter, on trying our room door and finding it fastened, concluded we were all out, but went round to the back of the house "to have a look at the winder" which my brother had sent him to mend—of course not expecting to find it converted into a man-trap. He had noticed while knocking at the door, that the parlor window was unfastened, and, thinking it was unsafe especially as Mrs. Brown was out, he had used his privilege as our old friend and hers to get through and fasten it before coming up stairs. No doubt the thief had entered the house by that way.

It was not long before help came, and the door was broken open, when our misery was ended. I dare say, since prisons were first built, there never was a culprit who walked into jail more meekly than did the one who had intended to rob my brother.

They say the poor fellow's hands will never be right again; amputation may be necessary, as erysipelas is setting in. Well, all I can say is, I freely forgive him for the suffering, mental and bodily, he caused me.

I was in bed for a fortnight, but eventually got all right again. Dear Ted says I am a brick, but that may be his partiality. Anyhow, my footstool proved to be a very effective safe. To this hour no one knows about it but you, Ted and myself.

THE GEORGIA BLOODHOUND.

Let me tell you what a Georgia bloodhound can do, and he can be made to do this any fair day at Oldtown camp. A convict sleeping in one bunk of a hundred, shod and clad precisely as the hundred convicts about him, may slip his chain and flee. Ten miles away he may meet his fellow prisoners again, may run to and fro among them, may walk with them a mile and leave them. Six hours after these hounds put on his track where he slipped from the camp, will follow him to where he met his gang, will thread his track in and about their hundreds of tracks, take it up where he leaves them, and run him down, though he cross convict gangs every mile he runs. This escaping convict, clad in stripes cut from the same bolt with a hundred others, may run through the woods, touching weeds and bushes as he runs. Fifty convicts, clad as he was clad, may run through the same woods in every direction. The dogs will hold his scent, running full tilt, breast high. If he makes a curve of 45 degrees the dogs will not run the line, but will catch his scent 30 yards away and cross the angle though it were filled with the convicts who had eaten and slept with the fugitive. Often a dog will carry a scent in gallop, running parallel 30 yards to the windward; An uncanny and terrible little beast is the red-bone hound, trained for the hunting of man.

Its highly concentrated curative power, makes Ayer's Sarsaparilla the best and cheapest blood purifier known.

Letter from Cottage City.

COTTAGE CITY, JULY 11TH.

The season here is very favorable for a large business this season. Most of the hotels are filled and but few of the cottages remain closed, and the boats bring daily a large number of summer residents. The hotel formerly known as the "Grover House" has changed hands and has been refitted at the expense of about $5000, which makes it one of the best on the island; the house is now called the Naumkeag. The general verdict of the new comer is that this year shows more improvement of a substantial character than in any year since this summer resort opened. Many new cottages have been built and old ones repainted and alterations made. Carpenters and painters have been in great demand this season. In a talk with a painter a few days ago he said that during the past spring there have been more changes made in the shape of remodeling and repainting than in any season. Since last summer gas has been introduced and electric lights to the number of thirty have been put in. This is a great improvement of the old oil street lamp which has been used for years, although they say the electric light is death on "bluffing." During the past week there have been some fine yachts anchored here, among them we noticed the "Electra" of the New York Yacht Club, with Commodore E. T. Gerry and family. The well known Puritan was also here for a few hours and was a good subject for one of our local photographers. Sword fishing is getting to be the favorite sport here; there are also large numbers of blue fish and sea bass caught here every day.

There is some talk of holding a grand carnival this summer and a meeting is to be called at an early date to decide about it. The Old Colony road has offered special inducements and there is no doubt that it will be held. The Woman Suffrage Association of Massachusetts will hold a convention here in the Tabernacle July 29 and 30. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. Lucy Stone, Rev. Annie Shaw, Miss Cora Pond and others. The Bay State Commandery of Brockton, which numbered about one hundred, was here on Friday last, stopping here on their way back from Nantucket where they had been on a few days' "outing." They were accompanied by Martland's band, making a parade and returning home on the afternoon boat. There is to be next season a new boat put on the line between New York and Portland which stops here two days of the week. It will be of 1400 tons burden and will be elegantly fitted up as a passenger steamer with all the modern improvements and appliances and a rate of fourteen knots per hour. The skating rink has been transformed into a first class Casino under the management of Mr. H. E. Reed of Salem, the well known former manager of the Salem Roller Skating Rink. It was opened last evening to a crowded house, the attraction being the Gilbert Opera Company in the "Mikado." It was well rendered and was well appreciated by the large audience present. They will change the programme three times a week so as to give better attractions. There will be skating on certain afternoons and evenings shortly. The Island now has a first class newspaper in the Martha's Vineyard Herald, published by Mr. Chas. Strahan, he having bought out the entire interest of the former publisher, Hon. Howes Norris. During July and August it is published semi weekly. In concluding I will say that we have a first class fire department here, but I think it would be greatly improved by the able assistance of the "Sparks" reporter, as we have a "Button" here and I believe that is a great favorite of his.

B.

THE HOT WEATHER of mid-summer has a weakening effect, both upon body and mind. You feel absolutely incapable of doing any arduous work, and even light duties are performed languidly and unwillingly. This low state of the system causes even greater infirmity, and gives opportunity for serious disease to gain a foot-hold. In this condition the system is quick to respond to the reviving, quickening, and strengthening effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla which purifies the blood, regulates the digestive organs, and infuses new life and vigor into every portion of the body. People who have taken it write us, saying: "It puts new life right into me. It makes me young again." Reader, if you suffer from summer weakness, try Hood's Sarsaparilla. 100 doses $1.

Anyone wanting fruit jars will find the largest stock and best quality at the lowest price at Perry's crockery store, Washington street, Salem.

Palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, cold hands and feet, pain in the back, and other forms of weakness are relieved by Carter's Iron Pills, made specially for the blood, nerves and complexion.

Mr. Samuel Trask owing to ill health will dispose of his hardware store. This is a fine opening.

That the ordinary sized flour barrel wrapped in old newspapers will about fill the modern idea of a young ladies' bustle.

That we make this calculation from the fashion plate.

That it spoils the editor's trade in old newspapers.

That the new style is as nice looking as a hen coop tacked on to a woodshed.

That the editor has a varied experience.

That he often sends his paper six or eight years in the hopes that the fellows will pay up.

That at the end of that time he has a paper returned to him with the words "Gone to a better land" written on the margin.

That he may get mad, but he don't take much stock in the statement.

That complaint is made that some of our village youths have been making themselves obnoxious upon the streets.

That the latest escapade by them is that of trying to "rail-ride some of the young lasses, by a long pole in their possession.

That this is obscenely odious in the extreme.

That our police will keep a sharp eye on those unruly "kids" and check them in their deviltry.

That Wakefield has a wily Board of Assessors.

That there are a goodly number of the machines in use in this town.

That the dust has been perfectly dreadful.

That residents out side the reach of the watering cart are the worst sufferers.

That our police are still hunting for beer, and are obliged to sample what they secure.

That when they sample beer in three per cent. alcohol, they feel like the man who has to drink it 97 per cent. cuss.

That you should look out for the stock companies who have just a few shares, and are willing to let you in "on the ground floor."

That you should also give the go by to the "experienced responsible lawyer" who says "he stands high in his profession," has a record of winning "ninety per cent of his cases," and will do your law business on shares.

That when a girl is young she wants numerous dolls, but when she grows older her wants increase, and she desires several dollars.

That your mirror will tell you what none of your friends will.

That handkerchiefs are now to be found in the pocket, and the pocket is to be found—in the dress of the period—by expert and persistent endeavor.

The Danvers Mirror says: "In the recent annual report of the Trustees of the Peabody Institute the Librarian states the whole number of books in the Library as 11,375, of which 402 were added last year. The reading room, which has been opened to the public about two years, is pronounced a success. The permanent funds of the Institute amount to $75,208.22, of which $54,693.72 are the Library fund, and $16,514.50 Reserve fund, the whole invested in loans on mortgage, Danvers Water loan bonds, and Western and Pacific railroad bonds, at rates from 4 1-2 to 6 per cent interest. The Trustees are Daniel Richards, Samuel P. Fowler, Isarel W. Andrews, Joshua Silvester, Israel H. Putnam, Francis Peabody, J. Peter Gardner, William T. Damon and Lucius A. Mudge; Mr. Andrews being President, Mr. Peabody, Treasurer, and Mr. Gardner, Clerk of the Board.

Oskaloosa Herald: John B. Finch of Nebraska, an ex-Democratic representative, now working for prohibition and revenues only, makes his brags that the St. Johnites under his leadership in New York this fall, will defeat enough Republican candidates for the legislature to give the United States Senatorship to the Democrats. These Democratic prohibitionists are doing the old organization great service, and will receive full recognition therefor.

Heretofore Beverly has been at the head of the column of large Essex county towns. Now, Amesbury which always came first on the list, but with smaller population than Beverly, will beat the latter by just 40 inhabitants, and next to Peabody will be the largest town in Essex County. That is according to the last census, Amesbury gained about 4000 population in one day by the annexation of Salisbury, or the larger part of it.—Beverly Times.

The Salem Telegram has passed from the editorial management of Mr. W. S. Nevins, and will in the future be edited by Mr. C. E. Trow of the Methuen Transcript, assisted by Mr. E. O. Foster, who has been connected with the paper as business manager.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The children of our public schools who attended the convention of Music Teacher's National Association in Boston, two weeks since, received a very commendatory notice in the Boston Traveller. The sight singing and other results were very satisfactory, and reflected credit upon the children here as well as Prof. Bill.

Mrs. Minnie Smith Tigh, formerly leading soprano soloist at St. John's church here, sung an "Ave Maria" at last Sunday's vesper service.

Geo. A. Shepard the well known secretary of the Salem Oratorio Society is on a six weeks vacation to San Francisco. Miss E. Dora Clark takes his place as organist at the Tabernacle church.

The Sunday concert of the Salem Cadet Band drew the largest crowd of the season at the Willows, last Sunday. This band gave its first concert at the Masconomo House, last Saturday.

F. C. Record has gone to Old Orchard, where he is to assume his duties as director of an orchestra at the Old Orchard House.

The Salem Brass Band give a concert at Danvers this evening. What is the reason we can't have some open air concerts in Peabody?

Miss Rowe, of Salem, supplied for Mrs. Chase at the South church last Sunday. Mr. Davis from Salem took Mr. Chase's place, and Mr. Harper from Charlestown sung tenor.

The late Mrs. H. O. Wiley, then Miss Catherine Dempsey, sang contralto for some time in the Unitarian choir of this town. George Tapley of Danvers was a member of the choir at the same time and Jacob Young was organist.

Miss Elene Buffington Kehew further demonstrated the wonderful qualities of her voice at the National Teacher's Association concerts in Boston this week. Miss Kehew has stepped to the front of American singers, and her services are in constant demand in oratorio and in the rendering of a high class of music. She has been engaged to sing in New York city the coming winter, where in the singing of the solo parts she will be required to cover two and a half octaves; there is not a singer in the city who can render the music, as there are none whose voices have the required compass.—Salem Observer.

Mr. Isaac Littlefield is in town today. In company with Miss May C. Barrelle, of Lynn, and H. Grahame Wheeler, of this town, he gave an entertainment last evening at the Ocean House, Swampscott.

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. WOOD, Bloomington, Ill.

For Twenty Years

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. BALCOM, Shirley, Mass.

"I suffered from what the doctors called muscular rheumatism. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured." J. V. A. PROUDFOOT, letter carrier, Chicago, Ill.

We shall be glad to send, free of charge, to all who may desire, a book containing many additional statements of cures by

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE READERS of the PRESS have no need to be told that we are in sympathy with the work of the Law and Order League in this town. We do not, however, approve of everything done by the League, simply because it is done at their direction and by their authority. For the reason that we desire to see no return to the license law in Peabody, we wish to see counsels prevail which shall be moderate in judgment and command the respect of all citizens. We do not consider that such wisdom was used in the recent raid made upon landlord Baldwin at his hotel.

We have no desire to shield Mr. Baldwin, or anyone else, in the illegal sale of liquor. But we have good reason to believe that no liquor has been sold at the hotel since the conviction of Mr. Baldwin for liquor selling. We learn this from guests there—from travelling people who have endeavored in vain to obtain liquid refreshments on the sly—people who go there from week to week, and who could get it if any one could, and who have no object in misrepresenting the state of affairs. At the same time the officers have an undoubted right to search Mr. Baldwin's hotel premises if they suspect he is selling liquor. But there is a question if they have the right to do it, or if they have the right, there is surely a question if it was wisdom to do it in the manner in which the raid was made last week. The guests in Mr. Baldwin's house have rights which even the officers of the law are bound to respect. Their room in a hotel is to them their residence—their home. If they desire to keep therein liquor for medicinal purposes—even more, if they desire to keep it as a beverage they have as much right to do it as any citizen has to keep it in his private house. And a man who so keeps it don't want to come before the court and claim the liquor publicly, and he ought not to be obliged to.

Mr. Baldwin, as we understand it, has no objection to the search of his own part of the premises. But he does object to the search, late at night, of the rooms belonging to his guests. We don't blame him. People will not stop at his hotel if their room is to be broken into at all times of the day or night, because an officer suspects some liquor is being concealed there. And because Mr. Baldwin has once been convicted of illegal selling, that is no reason for the breaking up of his legitimate business. Since the removal of the hotel we have a hostelry such as this town has not seen for years. It is foolish to say that there is no need for such a hotel. It is a benefit in many ways. The improvements made by Mr. Baldwin are a credit to him and the town. This is not a reason why he should be allowed any privileges to which he is not legally entitled, but he is surely deserving of respect in the pursuit of his calling as a hotel keeper, which is as legitimate a business as any conducted in town.

THE MANLY statement of Samuel Donnell & Son, in another column, cannot fail to command attention. This firm have been in business long enough in our town to deserve a respectful hearing, and when they state, as they do, that the difficulty with regard to the sale of goods to a certain party in town was purely a business transaction, and had no reference to any action by the Knights of Labor, it only shows what desperate expedients are resorted to for sensational articles, particularly in times of labor troubles.

We presume any business man will acknowledge that the reasons given by Messrs. Donnell are sufficient to show that the affair should never have placed before the public. It never would have been were it not for the eagerness to make a point against the Knights of Labor. It is easy just now to make such points. It is due to that organization to state that no request or demand was made on Messrs. Donnell regarding the sale of goods to this man. It is due to the firm, also, that the public should know their position. And at this time, when the manufacturers are contending for the right to transact business, in their own way, it is proper that they should accede to Messrs. Donnell & Son the same privilege which they ask for themselves.

THE LABOR troubles in town have assumed for the first time in many years a serious aspect. We have been singularly free in that respect from the difficulties which have beset other places. No one, be he manufacturer or laborer, but must regret the circumstances which cause the cessation from labor of large numbers of men. We give in another column the facts in the case as near as we can gather them from either side, in a spirit of friendly feeling to all concerned.

It is for the interest of the town that a harmonious settlement of the difficulties should be made as speedily as possible. Capital and labor can never be inseparable. One must supplement the other. Rash statements and rash steps very likely may be taken on both sides; both sides may have to make concessions. A strike or a lockout, under whatever circumstances, or from whatever cause, is a calamity which must be regretted on the part of the manufacturer as well as the laborer. For the sake of the welfare and prosperity of our town, we hope wise judgment and calm counsels will prevail on both sides to the end, that harmony may be restored between the men and their employers and work at our shops be again resumed.

INJUSTICE.

The statement in the Peabody Reporter under date of July 3d in which we are represented as refusing to furnish a certain individual with goods on account of orders received to that effect from a local organization, we unhesitatingly pronounce a fabrication of the basest kind. What information we did receive in regard to the party, came through a gentleman in the same line of business as ourselves, and who is not a member of the organization referred to. We always supposed that we had the privilege of selling our goods to whom we pleased, and in this case it was a simple business transaction between the individual and ourselves, which we considered we were fully capable of adjusting without any outside help, especially from parties who had no business to be interested. The man was simply told by us that we did not care to be mixed up in anybody's muddles, and he would oblige us by transfering his patronage to some other store. We did not expect to be drawn into a Newspaper controversy in regard to this matter, but there are generally two sides to every question. Recollect this party has been paraded up and down the Commonwealth as the honest and upright man. We do not dispute the statement in the least, but the solid and substantial fact remain that Mr. L. M. Copeland came to us an entire stranger, bought goods of us, just about four weeks to a day. He made his first payment after two weeks trading, leaving a balance due us of $1.41; made a payment the following week, leaving a balance due us of $1.61; made a payment the following week, leaving a balance due us of 2.35, which still remain a very creditable showing on a short acquaintance, especially when three people constitute this family. To the party who has displayed such a generous and manly feeling towards us by representing us as making a statement which we never made, we return our kindest and best wishes, and would say that during our 42 years of business life we have a record which we are not ashamed but proud of. To all of our friends who have encouraged us while false representations and slander has been rampant, we return our sincere thanks and assure you that in the future as in the past they will find us,

Their humble and obedient servants

THE LABOR TROUBLE.

Early in the afternoon of Monday, there were rumors that the executive committee of the Manufacturer's Association were about to post a notice to their men, stating the conditions on which they might resume work the next day, and a few hours later the following notice, which is self explanatory, was posted in all the Association tanneries.

CIRCULAR.

Whereas, At a meeting of the Leather Manufacturers of Salem and Peabody, at which over 60 members were present, the subject of dictation to us in the management of our business was referred to a committee, with full power to act as in their judgment may seem best, and that we follow such course as they may advise. That committee, having met, report the following resolutions:—

That hereafter we employ only such men as will bargain individually with us and agree to take no part in any strike whatever; and all men desiring so to be employed by us may report Tuesday morning, July 13th, at the usual hour at this factory;

That we are determined to stand by all men who do so, and also determined to run our business without any dictation.

July 12, 1886.

As a result of the above, a larger part of the employes of the leather district did not return to work yesterday morning. A representative of the PRESS called on many of the leading manufacturers, and the information he received was, that the manufacturers had been organizing for their own protection, and when the following circular was presented them by the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor of District 77, they oncluded to take immediate action.

LYNN, July, 1886.

MESSRS———

The men employed at the tanning and currying industries in Salem and the town of Peabody respectfully ask the same privileges as the men in Boston, Woburn and vicinity are enjoying at the present time, namely: That on and after July 12, 1886, the hours of labor will be so regulated as to commence work at 7 o'clock a. m. to 12 m., and from 1 p. m to 6 o'clock p. m. except on Saturday, when it will be from 1 to 5 o'clock p. m. Trusting their request will be granted, we, are respectfuly, the executive board, K. of L. D. A. 77.

LOUIS C. T. SCHLEIBER, Sec.

A conversation with one member of the Association may be said to voice the sentiment of the whole, and give the key to their side of the question. He said: "The manufacturers have been making little money for a long time, and many of them were in favor of shutting down until business was better. This is the season for summer hides which are always of an inferior quality and on which no money is made. The price of hides is outrageously high and leather low. So you see it is a very favorable time for the manufacturers. Another thing we have got sick of, being dictated to by outside parties, who assume to know more of our business than we do ourselves. We don't care for the extra ten minutes that the men are asking for, but we do want to settle our differences with the men, instead of outside parties, and I guess after a shut down for four or six months business can be started with more satisfaction to all concerned."

"Have most of the manufacturers a supply of finished leather on hand?" was asked.

"Yes there is no time when we have not a good supply ahead, and some of the larger firms have more than they care to carry."

"Were all the manufacturers prepared for the action of their executive committee in calling for what they must have known meant a general 'shut down'?"

"No, we were many of us expecting something of the kind but were not fully prepared, but it might as well come one time as another. We shall pack most of our stock and quietly wait the result."

The members of the committee named on the circular, were seen and said that the circular represented just what they meant; it was in plain language that all could understand. This decision had been come to after careful deliberation, and "We shall live up to the circular."

In most of the shops there were from two to six men working, and in others the proprietors were dressed with a jumper and rubber boots arranging things for a shut down. In many instances the men working by the piece went to work as usual yesterday morning, and where steam was up, finished the work.

The members of the Knights of Labor seem to take the matter cheerfully. They say they are well organized and that they will receive help from the order in the different parts of the country. Peabody has always been a banner town in helping others who were on a strike, many of the members assessing themselves as high as 75 cents a week to help their fellow laborers in another part of the state. "Why," said one of them, "we paid 25 cents a week to Dunn, Green & Co's. men of Hudson during that long strike and assessed ourselves a dollar each in answer to Master Workman Powderly's appeal for the railroad strikes and that represented more than $2000, and do you suppose we won't get just as liberal a return now that the trouble has reached us?" The bosses are not prepared for this shut down, said another, they have got work that has got to be done and some of them don't hesitate to say that they think their committee has been too hasty. All day yesterday the streets were lined with men, and in the evening the tanners and curriers assembled in Blaney's Block and was largely attended and the situation discussed. The men were out spoken in their determination to stand by their organization. This morning everything is quiet about the square and only a few men are seen loafing about the streets. A large number took their fishing tackle and started off for the fishing ground, and one party of 18 have gone into camp for a while and will enjoy themselves with fishing and boating. It is understood that a man with a family will receive $7 a week, and a single man $5 a week.

The shops in town are as follows:

Michael Shea Central street, stopped at 8 o'clock. He had five men Tuesday morning.

Albert F. Poor tanner, 20 men. Didn't start as the men did not come to work. He did not post the notice.

Dah'l & Co., 20 men; all at work.

J. S. Crehore Hardy street, 14 men; all at work.

J. A. Lord tannery and currying shop, 100 men; all out.

L & G. H. Poor tannery and currying shop; Wallis street, 54 men; all out. Crowninshield street, 32; all out.

Samuel Simonds Walnut street, 9 men; one at work.

Webster & Co., 80 men employed; all at work.

R. H. Brown & Co., tannery 19 men; all out but two; it is understood they were ordered out. Shop, 10 men; all at work but finished at noon.

J. E. Harris 24 men; all out but three.

Calvin Osborne currying shop, 14 men; all out. Men were not notified not to work, but did not come Tuesday morning.

P. L. Winchester 15 men; all out.

John O'Shea ten men; all at work.

Newman Perkins 30 men; two at work.

S. A. Southwick 16 men; four at work.

Geo. J. Winchester 35 men; two at work.

R. S. D. Symonds Spring street; 24 men; all out.

Wiley & Poor 35 men; 5 at work.

Lowd & Buxton 20 men; all out.

B. & A. N. Jacobs 12 men; all out.

John Callahan 23 men; all out.

Geo. Pierce 9 men; one at work.

J. H. Poor 20 men; one man at work.

Henry C. Torr tannery shut down.

F. Osborne Jr. & Co., 80 men; 18 at work.

Warren Wilson Jr., 14 men; 2 at work.

Nelson & Merrill 25 men; 3 at work.

Richard Smith 9 men; 5 out.

Dennison Osborne 12 men; all out.

Hemenway & Caller 17 men; all out.

Thomas E. Proctor 150 men; all at work except the splitters.

Henry Wilson 15 men: all out.

The large establishment of Thomas E. Proctor was running as usual yesterday morning. The notice of the committee came so suddenly that Mr. H. P. Reed, the manager, did not see fit to take the responsibility until after a consultation with the head of the firm.

The square presented a holiday appearance, crowds of men who gathered in the shade discussing the situation, and speculating as to the length of the struggle.

The Committee of the Manufacturers Association have received a communication from the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor and have replied to the same. It is hoped that this means speedy settlement of the trouble by arbitration.

The Whiteners at the factory of Thomas E. Proctor were laid off yesterday. Some of the manufacturers don't like it because Mr. Proctor did not close up with the rest. It is further reported that orders were given to discharge the men as soon as their work is finished. It is probable that the entire establishment will be closed by the last of the week.

The Manufacturers Association Committee meet with the Woburn Committee of the same organization in Boston to-day.

While fishing in Rock Pond one day this week, W. A. Butler, Esq., and Mr. S. J. Palmer the jeweler, saw the head of a curious animal rise from the water. It had eyes as large as a seal, in a head resembling that of a snake, but six inches wide. It disappeared as suddenly as it arose, and left a large wake behind.—Georgetown Advocate.

We have been carefully watching the seashore papers for some time to see which "would be the first to discover the sea serpent." But we were hardly prepared to have it come from an inland town like Georgetown. But the Advocate is relieved of all responsibility in the matter by giving the names of the informants. We don't know Mr. Palmer, but such stories are right in the "line of business" of the other fellow, and we supposed he talked to Mr. Palmer as he does to a jury, until that gentleman was convinced that he saw it, whether it was thre or not.

SPARKS.

Last Friday afternoon the official test of the automatic fire alarm was made by the Committee, Board of Engineers and Selectmen. The alarm was completed Thursday afternoon, and several boxes were rung in, the system working favorably. Friday afternoon about 2.30 o'clock, chief Buxton stepped up to box 7 at the Central Station, and pulled down the lever and set in motion the machinery all along the line. The bell in the South church steeple struck out the number of the box plainly, and distinctly, but the whistle could not be heard on the Square, owing to the strong east wind which was blowing at the time, and the ring of the bell. The inspecting party consisting of the above named Boards, together with President Stover and Supt. Rogers of the Gamewell Company, Chief Hadley of Salem, Chief Goodhue of Beverly, and other fire officials were taken in Linehan's barge Indian Chief, over the districts covered by the fire alarm. Boxes 8, 9, 17, 18, and 23 were rung in and then the barge drew up at box 19 in front of the Endicott school house on Tremont street. This was to be the test of the day, as upon the striking of this box, Hose companies Nos. 1, 3 and 4 were to respond and lay a line of hose. This served to draw a large crowd to the spot, and when Chief Buxton approached the box, over a hundred watches were examined to get the correct time to be made by the contesting firemen. The lever was pulled down at about 3.12 o'clock, and almost immediately the bell was heard striking out the number. In just two minutes Hose 4 came in sight, coming around the corner of Midway street with two horses driven tandem, and going with the speed of the wind. They drew up before the box in just 3 minutes from the time the alarm was pulled. The greatest interest was centered in No. 1 and 3, and in a few seconds Hose 1 put in an appearance coming up Midway street, and Hose 3 came in sight on Tremont street, both making strong efforts to reach the hydrant first, but the extra quality and speed of the horse of Hose 1, took that carriage to the winning point, just 5 seconds in advance of No. 3. The time made by Hose 1 was 4 minutes and 20 seconds, and by Hose 3, 4 minutes 25 seconds. Hose 1 made a quick hitch to the hydrant, laid 100 feet of hose and had a stream of water through the nozzle in just 5 minutes. The distance run by Hose 1 and 3 was within a hundred or so feet of 5000 feet, while that of Hose 4 was not quite so great. The correct time of the run should be 36 seconds less than that given, as it required that time for box 19 to strike around once. The time made in the run was very rapid, and would be much longer if made in the night time in answer to an alarm of fire. When the water was let on from the hydrant, three stones about as large as hens eggs were driven through the hose and lodged in the pipe, breaking up the stream.

The inspecting party at this point were joined by the committee on Fire Alarm of the Salem City Government, and the trip was resumed. A visit was made to the residence of Chairman Tibbetts of the Committee in charge of the erection of the alarm, where refreshments were served, after which the remaining boxes were struck in, the exhibition closing with the recall 22, struck from box 7 about 5 o'clock. The system consists of 15 alarm boxes, 5 of which are non-interfering boxes, a bell striker on the South church bell, a whistle and pull at the pumping station, an indicator in the Central station and Hose 5's house. An independent wire connects West Peabody at Brown's store with the Central station, the whole run by a battery of 40 jars, 12 of which are on the West Peabody line. The signal from West Peabody is given from a striker placed in the upper hallway of the Central Station, and strikes 16 blows in succession. Supt. Smart has a mechanical tapper in his house, and Engineer Tibbetts has one in his. There is considerable comment on the amount of noise made by the bell and whistle, many contending that it will not wake the firemen at night, but it is best to wait until it has had a fair trial before condemning it. Perhaps if the whistle could be raised a few feet higher, it would be an improvement. The whistle was heard at the Point of Pines when it was blown Wednesday afternoon.

John H. Tibbetts, S. S. Littlefield, H. A. Southwick, George F. Osgood and Thomas Carroll, constituting the Fire Alarm Committee, met yesterday afternoon and accepted the system conditionally. The conditions are that in case it should be decided that the whistle should be raised several feet, that the work would be done without any extra expense to the town. The system was then turned over to the Board of Engineers, who will decide on the distribution of the keys.

The General Putnam engine house at South Weymouth was totally destroyed by fire Saturday morning at 8 o'clock. The engine was saved but the old rocket engine, hose carriage, hose, house furnishings &c., were burned. The General Putnam was formerly owned by the town of Danvers.

We received the following yesterday.

Boxford, July 12th.

It may interest some of your readers to know that the new fire alarm whistle of your town, was heard dictinctly here last Friday between five and six o'clock. I heard it so plainly as to be able to count the number of the box. Couldn't hear the bell; hot and dry, good weather for weeds and tater-bugs. Yours Truly,

J. K. COLE.

Hook and Ladder No. 1, Hose 1, and 4 were out for practice last Monday night. The Bangor ladder and a roof ladder were put up on Eagan & Kelly's building on Grove street and two lines of hose were put on the roof.

A party of 15 firemen were sent to West Peabody, Friday night to look after the fire in the woods. They went armed with shovels, hoes and buckets and after about an hour's work left the fire in a safe condition. They arrived home about 10 o'clock.

The base ball nine of the Abel Proctor H. & L. company went to Cochituate last Wednesday and played a game of ball with the C. H. BoodyH. & L. nine of that place. The Peabody boys played a good game but were no match for the Cochituate team which was principally composed of the famous Cochituate base ball club. The score stood 19 to 6 in favor of the Cochituate boys at the close of the ninth inning, although they whipped the Peabody boys so badly they were bound to make up for it in their hospitality and after the game all adjourned to the hotel where a bountiful supper had been provided, after which an entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music was furnished. The Peabody firemen arrived home at 12.30 o'clock at night well pleased with their days visit.

Sparks from a locomotive set fire to the grass on the Lawrence branch road, last evening, and a crowd of men had to put in some pretty lively work to prevent the spread of the flames to the high grass in the rear of Bowditch school. It was thought one while that an alarm would have to be pulled in.

Steamer 2 has received a new piece of 4 1-2 inch suction hose, 10 feet in length. This is the first new piece for this engine since it first came to town in 1874.

Oriental Lodge A. O. U. W. of Salem have arranged for a very pleasant excursion July 20. The party will leave Salem by the B. & M R. R. at 8.13 o'clock for Newburyport, and take the steamer City of Haverhill for Haverhill, when an hour and a half will be allowed for sight seeing. They will then take the steamer for Black Rock, and remain several hours, giving those who desire, an opportunity to visit Salisbury Beach. At Black Rock there will be dancing, and music will accompany the excursion. Tickets are $1.25 for the round trip. The committee having the matter in charge are Frank Cousins, C. F. Verry, G. A. Griffin, G. W. Buffum and L. W. Semonds.

John M. Jones of Wrenham, England, published a notice in the Boston papers, to the effect that Mr. David T. Winter is no longer his agent in this country. Mr. Winter has been his agent for a setting out machine.

Peabody, June 30, 1886.

The Peabody Press.

Wednesdav Evening, July 14, 1886,

The law in relation to the selling of tobacco to minors is not being regular ly complied with by some people in this town. The W. C. T. U. at their own expense had a copy of the law printed and presented to all dealers so that there should be no one that did not understand the law. At the cigar stores the law is being obeyed but it is at the groceries the boys get their tobacco. They say their fathers sent them and are given the weed. The little fellows are persistent and determined. We were in a store recently when a boy about ten years of age came in for a five cent piece of tobaco and he was refused. In a few minutes he sent in another boy a little older and he was refused. A third and fourth were refused, in the fifth he found one old enough to buy it, and he went a short distance away till he received from his older companion what the law would not allow him to buy himself.

The installation of officers of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. took place last evening at their Lodge room, District Deputy Wm. D. Dennis and suite performing the work. The treasurer reported that the Lodge had on hand $5629.98. The total receipts for the last term were 943.10. Paid for the relief $240 and expenses 517.79. Six new members were initiated during the term. The following are the officers: N. G., John K. Saunders, V. G., Daniel F. Buxton, Rec. Sec'y. Eben I. Kimball, Treas. George F. Sanger, Warden, Chas. S. Goldthwait, Conductor, Chas. A. Weare, R. S. N. G., A. E. Southwick, L. S. N. G., Chas. S. Batchelder, R. S. V. G., Albert Trask, L. S. V. G., W. F. T. Gunn, R. S. S. Euward H. Porter, L. S. S., John Humphrey, I. S. G., Chas. A. Galeucia, O. S. G., Daniel A. Goodrich. At the close of the installation refreshments were served at town hall.

Mr. Albert Carleton, of whom we spoke last week as being very low, passed to a higher life last Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Carleton was stricken with apoplexy about nine days before while on a visit to West Peabody and while apparently in good health. He was born in Gardner, Me., and worked at his trade as a whitener of leather after he came to this town. He did good service during the war as wagoner of Company C, 5th Mass. Reg., receiving an honorable discharge in April, 1863. Mr. Carleton was an industrious and respected citizen and leaves a widow, three sons and two daughters to mourn his decease. His age was 54 years, 2 months and 28 days.

We have received a Newbern N. C. paper, bearing date of June 26, containing a notice of the decease of Sebastian Bangert of that town. Mr. Bangert was born in Germany and came to Newbern in 1833. In 1872 he married Caroline, daughter of Benj. Jacobs, who is well known in town and is particularly remembered by our soldiers who were encamped in the vicinity of Newbern during the war. He was a faithful member of the Methodist church there, was a good citizen and a kind and devoted husband. His widow and one child survive him. His age was 77 years.

Vegetables have taken a decided drop the past week. New potatoes are quoted at 35 and 50 cents a peck, Bermuda onions 6 and 10 cents a bunch, turnips 8 and 12 cents a bunch, beets 5 and 8 cents a bunch, string beans 10 and 12 cents a quart, wax beans 15 and 18 cents a quart and peas 40 and 60 cents a peck. Meats are steady, the only changes being in spring chickens, which have lowered. These prices are subject to changes, but the lowest prices will always be found at Hallowell & Smiley's Caller street Market.

Six mail bags that were on board the steamer Oregon were received in Boston last week. They had been recovered by the diver the week previous, and were forwarded to Boston in a wet condition. The bags were from Liverpool and Glascow for Boston. The letters were distributed by Postmaste Tobey to the different points. Mrs. J. P. Fernald received a letter among them from her mother who was at that time in London.

Mr. James Howley offers to his customers between now and Aug. 1st his entire stock, including Summer and Winter suitings, light overcoatings and pantaloons at cost. Mr. Howley expects to move into his new store about that time, and has ordered an entire new stock, so he must dispose of the old.

People who call once on Mr. Lafreniere, at the hotel, to have their hair dressing done, are sure to call again. We have no hesitation in saying that his work cannot be excelled by any barber in town.

Wm. G. Webber & Co., of Salem, are always making excellent window displays, but just now they have an attraction in the real silk worms, in their wonderful operations, which is worth a journey to Salem to see.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

The case of S. B. Winn's driver, Ephraim Provo, charged with keeping liquor with intent to sell, came up in the police court Monday morning. Officer Peasley was the first witness. He said Winn's team was standing in front of Thomas Duffy's on Foster street and Provo was delivering goods inside. He with Officer Crowley seized the horses and took the team to the station house and a warrant was issued. They searched the team and took from it four and one-half gallons of whiskey in six jugs, three gallons of rum in four jugs, and four bottles, one pint of gin in one bottle, one quart of wine in one bottle, thirteen quarts of ale in thirteen bottles marked tonic, nine gallons of lager in one keg and twenty-two bottles.

Officer Crowley, the next witness, said he saw the team on Lowell and Central and Chestnut streets and saw it drive up to Mr. Duffy's. He testified as to the liquor found on the team and to helping Peasley. The driver, Provo, said he had an order for the liquor he was delivering left at the office in Salem.

Officer Goodwin was not present when the team was taken, but he had seen it around town delivering goods. On the third of July he saw Provo delivering something at a house on Oak street and had seen him at different places in town.

Provo was represented by H. P. Moulton, Esq., and F. E. Farnham, Esq., appeared for the government. Mr. Moutlon said he was willing to rest the case without argument. Mr. Farnham had nothing to say except as to the penalty. It was an aggravated case and the defendant an old offender, and he would suggest that the punishment be more than a fine but sufficient to break up a nuisance.

Judge Merrill said there seemed to be sufficient evidence and he would fine Provo $100 and costs and sentence him to four months in the house of correction. Appealed.

The next case was that of Thomas A. Griffin, who was on the team with Provo. He was charged with assault on the officers and cruelty to animals. When the officers went to take the team Griffin attempted to drive them off by whipping the horses, but the officers kept their hold. This attempt to drive over the officers constituted the assault, and the whipping of the horses the cruelty to animals. For assault Griffin was bound over to the higher court next October and for cruelty to animals he was fined $10 and costs. The latter was appealed. Mr. S. B. Winn was security in each case.

Stetson's ice cream team was left on Park street, one day this week, and a 15-year-old Peabody lad named Fitzpatrick, who works in town, appropriated a box of cream from the wagon. Officer Mead let the boy off with a lecture, after he had agreed to pay for the stolen sweetness.—Danvers Mirror.

George Bailey took a header from his bicycle while riding out of town last Wednesday. During the night his wrist pained him, and he went to the doctor, and it was found that the small bones of the wrist were broken. He rode nine miles after the accident.

In the police court Thursday, Mary Comer for assault on Edward Shehan, was fined $15, and John Dougherty for being drunk was sent to the Almshouse for two months.

Conductor Frank Shepard of the Naumkeag Street railroad found a letter on his car recently, belonging to J. F. Mansfield & Co., the morocco manufacturer. It contained a small sized check, and was lost Memorial day.

The police visited Baldwin's Hotel last Saturday night and searched the whole house, taking away with them one bottle of wine which Mr. Baldwin claims was some German wine, and had been in his possession ever since he lived in his present quarters. Another bottle contained medicine left by a boarder.

A shaft was broken on Mr. Warren Shaw's buggy on Main street last Friday, by the falling of the horse.

The supreme court, full bench, has sent down a rescript in the case of Safford vs Weare, an action to recover possession of land in Peabody Judgment is given for demandant. The court says; "The judgement was erroneous, and as demandant's right is affected by it, and he is not a party privy to it, so that he can remove it in error, he can avoid it by proxy.

A man named Martin had a horse that was a little lame and he was sent to pasture in Middleton in the same field with oxen, and when he went to look after him Sunday he found he had been badly gored in the side. The skin was badly cut.

The Salem Observer quotes what we said last week about the condition of Billy Hayes and adds: "Now, pray why should he be having anything better. If his crime does not deserve a severe punishment we know of none that does. A man who would attempt to blow up a whole family just because he had a grudge against a member of it, deserves to have a "hard time," and we hope there will be no attempt made to excite sympathy in his behalf." Nothing was further from our intention. We believe his sentence was just and that he should suffer like any other criminal.

The tire came off Bialstreet's ice carts on Sunday while coming down Washington street and the first intimation the driver had of it was when it rolled ahead of the team. They put it in position again before the wheel collasped.

While a boy named Allen was attempting to get a piece of ice from the rear of an ice team in Washington street last Friday a large piece of ice fell from the tail board of the wagon and struck on the bare foot of the boy crushing one toe.

Some one broke into the currying shop of Lowd and Buxton on Foster street last Sunday and ransacked a desk, but nothing was missing. This kind of mischief is getting too frequent and we hope to see the police catch the offenders.

Mr. Timothy Desmond's friends are getting anxious about him. He has not been seen since last Thursday when he started from his store on Washington street to go to Salem on an errand.

Capt. Wm. F. Wiley was thrown from his buggy last Monday, as he was driving into his yard. The horse freed himself from the carriage; Mr. Wiley was not injured and no serious damage was done.

One day last week Mr. Stevens the well known Carriage Manufacturer of Amesbury came up from that town with an elegant high priced buggy for one of our citizens. It was attached to the buggy he occupied himself and was run into by a heavy team and so badly injured that it had to be returned to the shop and the damage repaired.

For Instant Use

As a reliable remedy, in cases of Croup, Whooping Cough, or sudden Colds, and for the prompt relief and cure of throat and lung diseases, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is invaluable. Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa, writes: "I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy for home use. I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults." John H. Stoddard, Petersburg, Va., writes: "I have never found a medicine equal to

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

for the prompt relief of throat and lung diseases peculiar to children. I consider it an absolute cure for all such affections, and am never without it in the house." Mrs. L. E. Herman, 187 Mercer st., Jersey City, writes: "I have always found Ayer's Cherry Pectoral useful in my family." B. T. Johnson, Mt. Savage, Md., writes: "For the speedy cure of sudden Colds, and for the relief of children afflicted with Croup, I have never found anything equal to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is the most potent of all the remedies I have ever used." W. H. Stickler, Terre Haute, Ind., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured my wife of a severe lung affection, supposed to be Quick Consumption. We now regard the Pectoral as a household necessity." E. M. Breckenridge, Brainerd, Minn., writes: "I am subject to Bronchitis, and, wherever I go, am always sure to have a bottle of with me. It is without a rival for the cure of bronchial affections."

RICHARD K. FOX,

FRANKLIN SQUARE, N. Y.

THE MUSICAL BURGLAR.

The prince of all modern burglars was undoubtedly the late Mr. Peace. His proceedings, after his conviction, were scrutinized with the most eager attention by the majority of the inhabitants of the British Islands. They delighted to have bulletins of his health after his daring leap from the railway carriage, to hear of his theological disquisitions, which were slightly enfeebled by cries for a drink, and to be told how he partook of coffee and eggs and bacon on the morning of his execution. Like other great men, he has been forgotten; but it may be worth while to record some of the particulars of that extraordinary career. He certainly raised burglarly to one of the fine arts. Peace was endowed with an ability, a force of character, an intensity of purpose, which in any profession would have made him eminent and useful. He had a wonderful taste for music and was called the youthful Taglioni. He was fond of natural history. He had a great taste for mechanical construction, and once in his life time he actually called on Mr. Plimsoll to get his support for a method of raising sunken ships. But all his highest aspirations were directed toward the noble art of burglary. He began with what is called "portico" business. He learned how to swarm up the porticoes of houses and hotels, and he had to do this in spite of the great physical disadvantages of being lame. By industry and ingenuity he succeeded in overcoming this defect. He met with more serious discouragement through repeated convictions. He was indeed repeatedly convicted, and earned sentences of four years, of six years, and of ten years' penal servitude. Nevertheless, he seems to have thought that the business was so lucrative that he would persevere in it, despite all risks and misfortunes. His gains were very large, his work being planned and conducted in a very bold and systematic manner. He always had a crucible at hand, with which he could melt gold, and display it in an ingot form, and without difficulty dispose of it. He must have had considerable acquaintance with receivers of stolen goods, but though strongly pressed on the subject by the prison chaplain after his last conviction he refused to give any information. On many occasions he seems to have taken more than £300 worth of property in a night. Once he lighted upon a safe which looked very much as if it contained valuables. He was quite unable to force it open. He went upstairs, entered the owner's sleeping room, found a key in his pocket which looked like the key of the safe, and which, in fact, proved to be so. That night the booty was at least £250.

THE PARIS OMNIBUS SYSTEM.

The Avenue Victoria on Sundays and fete days affords a good idea of the part the Paris omnibus system plays in the life of the city. When it is a wet afternoon that system may appear to a Londoner simply perfection. Broad shoulders and strong elbows obtain no advantage. Whatever loss there may be in the way of politeness, all is so perfectly fair that a soldier would not be expected to yield his place to the most fragile of demoiselles. Whoever wishes to enter an omnibus must go into an office close by one of the stations and obtain a number, which number entitles its holder to a place in due order, and all he has to do when the omnibus arrives is to wait among the group at the door until his number is called. The system, however, it must be confessed, rather breaks down on fete days, when it is customary at very crowded stations to issue half a dozen tickets or more of the same number, the holders of which are all let in one after the other. It is hard to tell why this is done, except it be to keep up people's patience by the illusion that their turn is six times as near as it really is. Correspondence tickets are issued, so that you can travel from one end of Paris to the other for 3d. If you do not want to use more than one omnibus and ride on the imperial, a most agreeable way of seeing the city, the fare is only 1½d. The Paris omnibuses being all in the hands of one company, which, of course, is well looked after by the authorities, the city is so mapped out that a person with but little knowledge of the city has only to buy one of the twopenny guides sold at the omnibus stations, and in a very short while he can acquaint himself with the forty-nine routes, and with the various signs by which he can recognize during day or night the omnibuses which ply along them. The results appear to be as beneficial to the company as to the public. In 1881 the Paris Omnibus Company netted a gain of 2,804,376f. on returns amounting to 36,106,250f. They possessed in that year 13,292 horses and 1,845 omnibuses and traincars, which during the year traveled between 13,000,000 and 14,000,000 miles, the number of persons conveyed amounting to 180,396,104, of whom 28,882,567 made use of the correspondence tickets.

Only imagine a man acting for one single day on supposition that all his neighbors believe all they profess and act up to all they believe. Imagine a man acting on the supposition that he may safely offer the deadliest injuries and insults to everybody who says revenge is sinful; or that he may safely intrust all his property without security to any person who says it is wrong to steal. Such a character would be too absurd for the wildest farce.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

in time. Kidney diseases may be prevented by purifying, renewing, and invigorating the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When, through debility, the action of the kidneys is perverted, these organs rob the blood of its needed constituent, albumen, which is passed off in the urine, while worn out matter, which they should carry off from the blood, is allowed to remain. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the kidneys are restored to proper action, and Albuminuria, or is prevented. Ayer's Sarsaparilla also prevents inflammation of the kidneys, and other disorders of these organs. Mrs. Jas. W. Weld, Forest Hill st., Jamaica Plain, Mass., writes: "I have had a complication of diseases, but my greatest trouble has been with my kidneys. Four bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla made me feel like a new person; as well and strong as ever." W. M. McDonald, 46 Summer st., Boston, Mass., had been troubled for years with Kidney Complaint. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, he not only the disease from assuming a fatal form, but was restored to perfect health. John McLellan, cor. Bridge and Third sts., Lowell, Mass., writes: "For several years I suffered from Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint, the latter being so severe at times that I could scarcely attend to my work. My appetite was poor, and I was much emaciated; but by using my appetite and digestion improved, and my health has been perfectly restored."

Prevented

THE

GREATEST LUXURY OBTAINABLE

For Impaired or Diseased Vision is a pair of

B. LAURANCE'S

Axis Cut Pebbles.

The frauds that have been perpertrated on the spectacle wearing public by most spectacle dealers and peddlers by giving assumed and fancy names to ordinary glass, speaks for the ignorance of the public generally, in the all important subject of the preservation of the sight. There are only two articles from which spectacle lenses can be manufactured, viz: Pebble and glass—call glass by any other name, it still remains glass. Pebble on the other hand is from nature's own manufactory. It is a natural crytal found generally in freestone formation, and is harder than the ruby and emerald and nearly as hard as the diamond. The pebble is not more or less than a transparent stone cut by the aid of diamond dust, and the greater amount of power is placed immediately over the center of the grain found in the pebble. It will give to the spectacle wearer a coolness, freshness and a pleasant feeling that the ordinary spectacle lenses cannot by any possibility impart. All spectacles and eyeglasses are stamped B. L. A. C. P. and can only be purchased from

OVER WARREN TRASK'S STORE.

THE FIRST STRIKE.

The first strike among our working people, I think, was at Dover, N. H., in 1827 or 1828. The Cocheco works were established in 1820, and the operatives were almost entirely American girls, who deemed that weaving and spinning was better than farming, and became "factory girls" on the erection of the works at Dover Falls. A small factory up the river was No. 1, and the works at the falls were Nos. 2, 3 and 4, as I believe they are at the present time.

Everything went on spinningly and smoothly until the year of which I write. There were exactions on the part of the corporation that the independent spirits of the fair spinners and weavers could not brook. A rule was made that the great gates should be shut at bell-ringing, and those who were late should go through the counting-room passageway to be marked for reduction of pay, largely disproportioned to the delinquency. This gave great offense, other measures awakened opposition, and on a fine morning the mills were idle. Every operative was out, leaving the overseers to run them alone.

They met at some convenient square, and, forming a procession, with a band, and bearing the American flag, they paraded the town, under a leader whom I knew well a year later, and a stalwart manly guard of one for their protection. The corporation came down at once, the offensive rules were withdrawn for the time, and everything went on harmoniously. But there arose, again, threats of war between James F. Curtis, a new agent, and Mill No. 2. He was not a fortunate selectior for the office, as he had been a sea captain, and endeavored to introduce ship's discipline among his crew of girls. It would not work, and a general irritation prevailed.

The climax was reached when he ordered the windows of No. 2 to be nailed down. This was done over night, and in the morning, when they found out what had been done, and one of the loom girls had fainted, their anger knew no bounds. A strike in that mill was the consequence. I saw the excited crowd from an upper window opposite, and such a clatter of tongues has not been heard since Babel. Agent Curtis was sent for, and went among them, angry at first, but that bird wouldn't fight, and he came down to coaxing, begging them to return, arguing the necessity for the nailing down, which excited them the more, until he compromised the matter by allowing the windows to be opened part way. Other inducements were given, and they returned to their work, but during the altercation with him they had spotted his black coat with cotton locks until he looked like a new description of leopard.

GOOD ORANGES.

To very many an orange is an orange, the only variation distinguishable being is size and corresponding price, while those who know the difference between Florida, Seville and Messina oranges are considered experts. The "Florida Catechism" tells us better than that. We learn from it that there are over thirty varieties of sweet oranges, not to mention the "natural stock," which is a larger and handsomer fruit than the sweet orange, and is excellent for orangeade and marmalade, but being very sour, is seldom shipped North. The medium sizes are apt to be the choicest, and probably the very sweetest orange that is marketed is the rusty-coated and rather ill-looking orange, which might be considered inferior by an amateur. Furthermore: "The way to detect oranges is to 'helt' them in your hands; pick out the thin-skinned, heavy fruit, and you are all right." The light-weight fruit is apt to be juiceless—a condition caused either by a slight freezing while on the tree, or, more probably, by the poverty of the soil in which it grew. All this applies to the sweet oranges.

The "kid glove" oranges are grown in Florida from two stocks brought, respectively, from China and Tangiers. Hence they are called Mardarin and Tangerine oranges. Both are small; the skin is loose and easily removed, and the sections fall apart so readily that a lady can eat one without soiling her gloves; hence the name. Some other interesting bits of information may be picked out from this "Catechism." It is not generally known, for instance, that "an orange that is entirely dead ripe in December will hang on the tree until March, and is ready at any time to be picked and shipped;" while so far from deteriorating, "the longer they hang on the trees the sweeter they grow," and Florida oranges, purchased in February and March, are therefore apt to be better than those procured early in the season. Again, the notion that to know what an orange is really like, one must go where the oranges grow, appears to be a popular fallacy, as we are told that "the orange picked from the tree is no riper or better than the orange on the fruit stalls in the North.

FOR HAY FEVER.—"Give Ely's Cream Balm a trial. This justly celebrated remedy for the cure of catarrh, hay fever, cold in the head, etc., can be obtained of any reputable druggist, and may be relied upon as a safe and pleasant remedy for the above complaints and will give immediate relief. It is not a liquid, snuff or powder, has no offensive odor and can be used at any time with good results, as thousands can testify, among them some of the attaches of this office."—Spirit of the Times, May 29, 1886.

A TRIP TO BALTIMORE.

What! a trip to Baltimore in the hot days of July, and particularly during the warm weather of the past week? This is what we mean and what we desire to commend to our readers. Not a ride thither by the dusty railway train, the inevitable accompaniment of a vacation to the mountains or most of the seashore resorts. No stage travel, no missing of railway connections with the waiting in the stations amidst hard sandwiches, muddy coffee or weak lemonade. But a journey on a steamer that leaves Boston on Saturday afternoon and lands you in Baltimore Tuesday morning—a change of scene, change of air, and a delightful, pleasurable rest from beginning to the end of the trip. Have we exaggerated it? Come with us and see.

The people of this town, and especially the leather merchants, should know the Merchants and Miners' Transportation line, plying between Boston and Baltimore. The line was organized some thirty-two years ago by leather and hide and shoe dealers in Baltimore and Boston for the transportation of their particular merchandise between these two ports; it is now owned principally in these cities, and many of the boats now or formerly on [illegible] line are named after stockholders [illegible] are among the successful business men in the country—notably George Appold and William Crane. The line now does a general freighting business, the traffic in leather between these two cities not being equal to that of years ago. Our merchants know the line for freighting—but few, we fancy, know by experience the pleasure to a passenger on one of the capacious boats of the line.

On Saturday afternoon, July 3d, one of the hottest days Boston had seen for this summer, at a little after three o'clock, we steamed down the harbor. The heat and dust of the crowded city was left behind us, and we had about thirty fellow passengers all bound for Norfolk or Baltimore. Our good fortune was to be on the D. H. Miller, the smallest but swiftest boat on the line, in command of Capt. Howes. We think every passenger leaving Boston was a stranger to Capt. Howes, but on reaching Norfolk every one was his friend. He has been on this line over thirty years—and nearly all this time between Boston and Baltimore. For this line runs steamers to Providence as well as Boston, besides others to Savannah, Ga.,—there being ten in use now. Capt. Howes opened the Providence line some years after the line to Boston had been in use. He was born in Sandwich, on Cape Cod, where he has relatives and many friends. Every time his boat rounds the cape on its Boston trip a salute of three whistles is blown reminding them that he has not forgotten them—particularly an only sister—and that he has thus far had a safe and pleasant journey home.

At the start, after the passengers had become comfortable by the stowing away of their baggage, and familiarity with the boat and their quarters for the next two days, they were speedily on deck. To most of us Boston harbor was familiar—but so familiar that the old acquaintance was cordially greeted, in contrast with the hot pavements of Boston and its environs. Down we go; past Fort Warren, Boston light and Minot's ledge, into the deeper waters traversed by the ocean steamers. The air becomes cooler; the breeze in the forward part of the boat is so stiff that we begin to think of going below for our overcoats—think of it, on that hot day—when we are summoned by the supper bell to the saloon below. The tickets on this line of boats include stateroom and meals en route without additional charge, and the table d'hote supper provided by Steward B. L. Howes as we left the harbor of Boston, with appetites invigorated by a three hours' sail, put all the passengers in good humor with each other and the steward himself. The nicest of broiled steak, lobster, cold meats, fried fish with all the fixins, equal in every repect to the best hotel, welcomed us to the first meal on the boat. Supper over, the passengers gathered in groups on deck, watching the shores of Nantasket, Cohasset and Cape Cod, which was the last land we sighted, and before morning, after leaving Gay Head, which was passed while the passengers were asleep, we are on the ocean, one hundred miles or so from shore, bound in straight course for Cape Charles. Sunday was a delightful day on the ocean. A few of the passengers, nearly all the ladies, were excused from breakfast, the hearty supper of the previous night having been too much for them. But before evening the sea sickness was mostly passed, and the anticipations of sighting Norfolk, Va., by daylight were speedily realized Monday morning. Leaving Cape Charles and Cape Henry, we arrive in sight of Fortress Munroe, Old Point Comfort, and are on historic ground.

Fortress Munroe was an important citadel in the time of the rebellion, and as we steam by it and glide into the beautiful waters of Hampton Roads, we realize the wonderful position which it commands. In these waters was fought the famous naval battles between the Merrimack and the Monitor. Through these waters to Norfolk were transported, on the very line of steamers on which we sail, the old Massachusetts Third Regiment under command of Gen. Ben. Butler. The steamer was the S. R. Spaulding, and Capt. Howes relates that these men "were going to put down the rebellion at once." Old Ben, he said, seemed to be the only man at that time who comprehended the magnitude of the struggle in which they were about to engage. But we are at Norfolk, one of the largest cotton ports of the South, and we are to remain while some of the freight is removed. This occupies several hours and meantime the old historic city can be visited. The removing of the cargo by the "darkies" is interesting to a Northerner. They work and sing, and eat and work. They are paid by the hour, and as they catch a piece of pie in one hand they roll on a barrel of potatoes with the other. They take no time for dinner and the cargo is speedily loaded, which is what is desired by the Captain and the passengers. The streets of Norfolk are poorly paved and the sewerage terrible. Yet there was life there; some fine stores, elegant business blocks and beautiful residences. There has been considerable building here the past year—it is a city which is growing in population and in business. Essentially Southern in many of its characteristics in the abundance of its colored population, yet it resembles a Northern city in its business enterprise. Open horse cars run in all directions at a cash fare of five cents—which is far ahead of Baltimore. The people are hospitable in the extreme, and a stranger is able in a few hours to obtain more information than he would acquire in a Northern city in as many days. The Atlantic House, a hotel near the steamer wharf, is one of the finest on the coast, and is in a cool location even in the warm days of summer.

Several hours later than was anticipated we left Norfolk for Baltimore, reaching that city early Tuesday forenoon. A description of some of the principal points of this city was published in these columns about a year ago, and although we remained there until Thursday afternoon we will content ourselves with a brief description of a trip in Baltimore harbor on the steamer Empire State.

Our readers may have wondered why the familiar and welcome excursions of this boat have not been advertised in the Boston papers. The fact is, after the trip from Salem to Provincetown with the G. A. R. Post of that city she sailed for Baltimore where she had been chartered by the Bay Ridge Co. to run in connection with another boat to a famous resort there. It is distant about thirty-two miles from Baltimore and the steamer makes two trips each way daily. This place was heavily advertised in the city papers: "More attractions than at any place on the Continent"; "managers of other summer resorts come daily to get points," etc. The fact is, any of the managers of resorts this way could give them points and not half try. When the Empire State was chartered the Company were to build a wharf 200 feet from the present one out into the ocean, as the Empire State cannot get to the present one without difficulty, as she is so large and draws so much water. It was to be finished by the last of June. It is not done yet, and July 4th, when she carried 2400 passengers, they had to be landed in small boats. The hotel is not finished; a theatre which is advertised is not in condition to do anything—in fact the whole place looks as if it were being got ready for a summer resort, yet it is advertised as being the place where "managers of other resorts come to get points." The Baltimore people are shy of the Empire State on account of her failure to make landings and her liability to run aground at the wharf; yet it is all the fault of the Bay Ridge Co. who are injuring their own reputation by allowing things to drag so. Yet this is a fair illustration of the enterprise, or want of it, which prevails in Baltimore and the South. On the trip which we made the boat came up to the landing, getting near enough to put out a gang plank in the forward end of the boat. She was soon aground, and while the Captain landed a few of the passengers the men at the wharf would give the boat no assistance. We believe a passenger could have fallen into the water and these minions would have looked on calmly and allowed them to drown. After a little, Capt. Phillips refused to land any more; he ordered the plank drawn in and the men on the wharf refused to cast off the rope. But by a little turn of the boat one of the men on the Empire State loosened the rope and we were off again. No meals are served on the boat, as the Bay Ridge Co. wish all the passengers to land and patronize the hotels and booths there. No liquors are sold either on the boat or at the resort at Bay Ridge, and in time we have no doubt the place will be worthy of patronage. The men on board the Empire State do not like the change from Boston harbor; and from a little conversation with Capt. Phillips, we judged that he, too, was not particularly pleased. Unless there is a change in the management of things, we shall look for the Empire State back again to Boston where the many friends of the boat and her officers will be glad to welcome her.

Starting from Baltimore on the eve of Thursday, the 8th inst., we find on board not a few of the old passengers who came out with us from Boston. They, like ourselves, had taken the trip for the rest to be obtained from an ocean voyage. We arrive at Norfolk the next morning where the boat is to wait all day for its freight of summer vegetables to be taken to Boston market. Norfolk is the central point to which these supplies are sent. The wharf is lined with small boats of every description filled with potatoes, cucumbers, tomatoes, apples and the like. These are unloaded at the wharf and transferred to the boat for Boston. Our boat was taxed to its utmost. Boxes of apples and tomatoes were brought on deck and placed along the sides and in the forward and aft part of the boat. Some 1600 boxes were thus disposed of. The freight on this line has reached such proportions between Baltimore and Boston that an extra steamer is soon to be put on, making three each week from Boston instead of two.

Before reaching Norfolk we are advised that by the courtesy of the line on which we are travelling we can spend the day at Old Point Comfort or Virginia Beach free of charge, while the freight is being loaded. Most of the party took the Old Point trip, and after an early breakfast we are furnished with coupons entitling us to a trip thither including a dinner at the famous Hygeia Hotel. We arrive at Old Point in season to visit Fortress Munroe and witness the guard mounting which takes place at 9 A. M. There is then time to visit the Soldiers' Home in Hampton and the Normal School adjacent. So taking a carriage with a sable driver to show us the points of interest we are driven over a level shell road to the Home. It is a beautiful place. No more fitting one could have been chosen. The main building with a dome commanding a view of Hampton Roads and the entire surrounding country was before the war a female seminary. Transformed into a home, with large and roomy apartments, it furnishes accommodation for 2000 soldiers whose only qualifications for admission is an honorable record in the war. They have an elaborate library and reading room. Papers from all parts of the country are sent them, and all the work on the place is done by the resident soldiers there. They do their own cooking, have a printing office and laundry connected, and everything is done to make the old soldier feel that the country is doing her part to make his last days pleasant and profitable. A memorial hall, the Ward Memorial, contains a fine opera house, where amusement is furnished the veterans from time to time. The profits from a store which is run by the home are devoted to the maintainance of this amusement and to the furnishing the reading room and library with proper material. Much is also given by liberal friends of the soldier in the North. In the cemetery adjoining are 6000 graves, some the graves of Confederate soldiers. The grounds in each place are kept in good order, there is an abundance of flowers and trees which grow luxuriantly. Near by, on a farm of 200 acres, is the Hampton Normal school for negroes and indians. It was vacation time; so we could see little of the workings of the institution save in the industrial works. The object of the school is to prepare the students for teaching in the South and among their own race. They are trained not only in education from books but each is obliged to devote some time to the work of a trade. Many of the students pay thus for their tuition. They have a saw mill, a tin shop, a harness and carpenter shop. Blacksmithing and the wheelwright trade is also considered of great use to them, and all these advantages are placed before them to make them useful factors in the future civilization of the South. We were furnished with a report of the principal of the school, a pamphlet of some ninety pages, which was printed and bound by the students there. It is a creditable piece of work and would be so considered by any office.

There is in Hampton the oldest church now used as a place of worship in America. It was built from brick brought over in 1634 from England. During the past year, however, the interior has been remodeled so that it has more the appearance of a modern church than of the old St. John's church. There is also in Norfolk a very interesting church, surrounded with vines and enclosed with magnolia trees, in the corner of which is to be seen a cannon ball which was embedded in its walls by the rebels.

We return to the Hygeia hotel, capable of accommodating 1000 guests, which is certainly one of the finest health resorts in the country. Everything is first class, and after a good meal for which we have been amply prepared, we arrive in Norfolk in season for the homeward trip. Leaving Baltimore about nine o'clock P. M. Friday night, we reach Gay Head Sunday morning. We find ourselves in a fog and in a dangerous locality. But Capt. Howes, who knows every inch of the locality, takes his station on the lookout, with the first officer and pilot also on the alert. The whistle is blown every minute or so and the danger is safely passed. The fog lifts, and we discern the shores of Vineyard Haven and Cottage City, going so near the latter as to distinguish the several hotels of that place. Thither the trip homeward was of interest—especially to those on board, and they were many, who approached the shores of Massachusetts and Boston harbor for the first time.

It is a trip which combines both pleasure and profit—rest and information, and at a reasonable expense. Twenty-two dollars will purchase a round trip ticket to Baltimore and return, including everything. Many of the more pretentious excursions of this season give less rest and comfort and can be accomplished only at a larger expense and greater difficulty. The heat of the past week was no severer in Baltimore than in Boston, and with the exception of a day or two in Baltimore which can be relieved by different excursions, there is no cooler place on the continent at this time of the year. We can cordially recommend the trip, and full information can be obtained, further, of C. P. Gaither, 290 Washington street, Boston.

This is the season of the year when more is said and thought about family jars and the kitchen can-can than during any other time in the year. The coming jar, the dealers say, is the new style which has a fastener made on the same principle as that which does duty on lager beer bottles. This kind "come high" as compared with the older patterns, but they save much vexation and considerable profanity on those occasions when the pater familias is called in to take the top from some extra fine canned fruit.

One of our physicians recently in speaking of the frequent requests made by the PRESS for more shade trees, says it has been his experience that he has had more calls, especially in cases of malaria, to streets where there are numerous shade trees, than those where the sunlight is allowed larger liberty. Can this be so?

The Milford Journal has passed its 36th volume. In speaking of the event it says "We have no extraordinary promises to make for the future". It needs to make none, because it cannot be improved. The people of Milford are liberal in their support.

The Wakefield Citizen and Banner commenced its fifteenth volume last Saturday. It is the oldest paper in the town, and still holds the lead against would be rivals. The proprietors showed their enterprise last week by issuing an extra Fourth of July number printed on paper of a patriotic color.

Messrs. Wm. Jelly, Geo. F. Brown, Nath'l Very, Jos. H. Webb and Matthew Robson have been chosen investment committee of the Salem Five Cents Savings Bank.

The Howe scale company of Rutland have just made an ingenious weighing arrangement which registers a person's weight when a five cent piece is put into a slot beside the recording dial. No heavier or lighter coin has any effect.

The funeral of Charles Marsh, of the well known dry goods firm of Jordan Marsh & Co., of Boston, took place yesterday. Their store was closed all day. Mr. Marsh was one of the best known business men in the trade, and his death will be a severe loss to the firm.

The man who would kick another out of his store or office for advising him how to run his business, as one paper puts it, can be seen after working hours strolling around toward the printing office full of suggestions to offer the editor as to the proper methods of conducting a newspaper.

If for forty-eight hours you can keep every drop of fluid from a room the flies in it will leave. But the prohibition is absolute. A drop of dew on a rose leaf, still more the congealed breath on a window pane gives as much fluid as the thirsty little fly will ask for. But a good housekeeper will remember this rule so as never to leave a pitcher of water uncovered in a room which she wishes to enjoy a nap in, or in which she means to place a guest. And she will carefully cover up any cup, mug, glass or vessel which contain liquids.

The Scientific American says if a bottle of the oil of pennyroyal is left uncorked in a room at night, not a mosquito or any blood-sucker will be found there in the morning. Our police were summoned to Lynnfield last Saturday, by a telephone message from that town to the effect that a man had been fatally stabbed. Officers Goodwin and Crowley immediately left for the scene. The men were employed in Henry Law's shoe factory, and lived on the turnpike road. Their names were Alfred J. Hayward and Osborne Richardson. There had been trouble between the families, which culminated in a fight Saturday, in which Hayward stabbed Richardson in the back of the neck, and twice in the left shoulder. Mr. John C. Kezar, of this town, dressed the wounds of Richardson and stopped the flow of blood until the arrival of Doctor Osborne. Hayward was secured by men in the shop, and handed over to the police. He spent Sunday in the police station, and was taken to Lynnfield Monday morning for trial. It was thought that Richardson would recover, and he was placed under $2000 bonds for the higher court.

Poet's Corner.

The Water Mill.

There has recently been much discussion as to the authorship of the following popular poem, and many inquiries in regard to it have been received. Gen. McCullom, without claiming it, has always had the credit of writing it, but it was really penned by Miss Doudney, a lady well known in English literary circles:

Listen to the water-mill!
Through the livelong day
How the clanking of the wheels
Wears the hours away!
Languidly the autumn wind
Stirs the greenwood leaves;
From the fields the reapers sing,
Binding up the sheaves.
And a proverb haunts my mind,
As a spell is cast—
The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed.

Take the lesson to thyself,
Loving heart and true;
Golden years are fleeting by,
Youth is passing too.
Learn to make the most of life;
Lose no happy day.
Time will never bring thee back
Chances swept away.
Leave no tender word unsaid,
Love while life shall last;
The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed.

Work while yet the daylight shines,
Man of strength and will;
Never does the streamlet glide
Useless by the mill.
Wait not till the morrow's sun
Beams upon the way;
All that thou canst call thine own
Lies in thy to-day.
Power, intellect and health
May not, cannot last;
The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed.

Oh, the wasted hours of life
That have drifted by!
Oh, the good we might have done,
Lost without a sigh!
Love that once we might have saved
By a single word,
Thoughts conceived but never penned
Perishing unheard.
Take the proverb to thine heart,
Take, oh hold it fast!
The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed.

The Irony of Greatness.

A plain, grave man once grew quite celebrated;
Dame Grundy met him with her blandest smile;
And Mrs. Shoddy, finding him much feted,
Gave him a dinner in her swellest style.

Her dining-table was a blaze of glory;
Soft light from many colored candles fell
Upon the young, the middle-aged, the hoary—
On beauty, and on those "who made up well."

A piece of crimson plush across the table
Shimmering its royal way from side to side,
And Mrs. S., whenever she was able,
Had loops and ends of satin ribbon tied.

Her china was a miracle of beauty—
No service like it ever had been sold;
And being unsmuggled, with the price and duty,
Was very nearly worth its weight in gold.

The flowers were wonderful—I think that maybe
Only another world had flowers more fair;
Each rose was big enough to brain a baby,
And there were several bushels of them there.

There serving was the acme of perfection;
Waiters were many, silent, deft and fleet;
Their manner seemed a reverent affection;
And oh, what stacks of things there were to eat!

And yet the man for all this honor singled
Would have exchanged it with the greatest joy
For one plain meal of pork and cabbage mingled,
Cooked by his mother when he was a boy!

THE TRADE IN HAIR.

PREPARING HORSE, OX AND HOG HAIR FOR UPHOLSTERING.

Sorting the Raw Material—Sent to the Dye Room—Mixing—The Process of "Curling"—Manufacture of Brushes and Fishing Lines.

The trade in hair is of no inconsiderable magnitude. Its length, strength and elasticity renders it useful for many purposes, varying according to its nature and origin. Since the beginning of the present century, hair, as distinguished from wool, has been largely manufactured. The chief sources of supply of this class of fiber are the group of animals represented by the alpaca, the caprine tribe, the camel, the horse, the ox and the hog. But it is only necessary to notice those of the horse, ox and the hog, which are manufactured in Brooklyn, N. Y. The bulk of hair obtained from these sources is used for upholstery purposes, being manufactured into curled hair for stuffing or hair cloth for seating.

The raw material is divided into several qualities, according to the purpose for which it is destined. The best is that denominated "hard hair," chiefly obtained from ostlers and stablemen, being tail hair procured in combing. That similarly got from the mane is of a different quality, being termed "soft." Knacker's hair, or that obtained from dead animals, is much inferior, "dead" hard hair not being more than equal to "live" soft hair. The depreciation which hair undergoes on the death of an animal is such that when worn out horses are sent to be slaughtered the knacker always cuts off the mane and tail previous to the operation.

FOR UPHOLSTERY PURPOSES.

Horse hair makes by far the best curled hair, but is not the only sort employed. Cow and hog hair constitute a large portion of that which is manufactured into the curled article for upholstery purposes. These are chiefly procured from home sources. Hogs which have high feeding do not yield hair either in quantity or quality sufficient to render its collection worth the cost. That yielded by lean animals is always the strongest and most elastic.

The raw material, having been supplied to the workers, is first separated into long and short hair, the former being carefully reserved for the manufacture of hair seating, fishing lines, brushes, etc., and the latter for curling or stuffing. The sorting is next repeated for the purpose of separating the colors. White hair is esteemed the most valuable, being used for special purposes and the supply being small. A third time this process takes place, this last being for assortment in two qualities. This is very important and requires nice discrimination and sensitiveness of touch in the sorter, in order to perform the process efficiently. Each quality of hair is next subjected to thorough washing in cold water to remove dirt, dust, etc. It is then sent to the dye room and immersed for several hours in a dye bath chiefly composed of a decoction of logwood. When removed it is of a dull black color. Further washing and cleansing then take place, the hair being put into large vats containing agitators, through which flows a stream of hot water. This treatment removes the superfluous dye and further purifies the hair.

Following the short hair, we find that the next process is mixing—making a blend of certain proportions of horse, cow and pig hair, according to the quality of the article intended to be produced. When the blends have been properly laid down, the material is passed through a series of "willows," by which the different sorts are thoroughly incorporated, becoming homogenous as far as mechanical admixture can produce such a state.

IN THE "CURLING" ROOM.

After passing through the third of these machines it is beaten and screened to clear away the dust created by this treatment, and is then ready for the curling process. "Curling" is carried on in a separate room called the curling room. The curlers spin the hair into ropes or strands by the aid of a machine similar to that employed in rope spinning. The rope is further twisted in a second operation, by which means it is reduced to half its first length. By a third process it is turned until it assumes a convolute form, when it is secured as a coil. These processes give to the hair its peculiar curl, which fits it for the purpose to which it is applied—stuffing for the seats of chairs, sofas, etc. It requires to be fixed in this condition, which is accomplished by the following treatment: The coils are immersed in cold water and allowed to stand for several hours. On removal from this they are placed in specially constructed ovens, which are treated to a very high temperature. After subjection to this heat for a sufficient time the curl is permanently fixed, and the germs of all parasitic life are destroyed. When the process of baking is finished the hair has become a marketable article and is sold either in form of hard curl as removed from the ovens or soft curl in which it is partly untwisted and the filaments are separated ready for use.

The long hair is applied to the manufacture of brushes and fishing lines, chiefly to that of hair cloth for upholstery purposes. After having been thoroughly cleansed, as stated before, it is combed by drawing the bunches through fixed combs, like flax hackles, which work is done by boys. It is next drawn into different lengths and thicknesses, which is an important and tedious operation, requiring both delicacy of touch and quickness of eye. These lengths range from fourteen inches to thirty-five inches. This work is performed by hand, though attempts have recently been made to accomplish the drawing automatically. Black hair is subjected to further treatment, in order to obtain a full, glossy blackness. White is bleached, in order to diminish the yellowish tint, which is its natural hue, but this is never perfectly removed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Superstition of the Chinese.

I saw a Chinaman burning paper in his doorway recently when I chanced to be passing his house late at night, in a back street in Brooklyn, and I had the curiosity the next day to ask an explanation from an intelligent Christianized Mongolian. He said that devout Celestials, particularly those who have just arrived from China, always burn paper in each doorway of the house before retiring at night. They believe that the progenitors of the present Chinese dynasty were dissatisfied with the Chinese customs which grew up at the close of their dynasty, of permitting aliens to enter the Flowery Kingdom, and attribute the success of the Tartars to that custom. To mark their displeasure they placed in the sky a star of death-dealing influence, which, if it should shine into their doors or upon the floors ten nights in succession, would cause the death of all who inhabit the house. Red, which to the Chinese mind, typifies all that is good and righteous, is the antidote; hence the red curtains hung before every Chinese house and laundry. Fire, which produces a red light, expels the demons, hence the customs of burning paper in doorways.—New York News.

All the present-day writers can do is to present matter in fresh ideas, as subjects ran out long ago.—Jud Lafagan.

BILL NYE'S REMINISCENCE

As Committeeman of a Recent Fourth of July Celebration.

In the summer of '77 I was on the committee chosen at a meeting of our citizens "to make arrangements for the proper observation of the regular national day which marks the onward march of freedom." We selected a proper place, hired lumber enough to make seats, with pitch on it to insure the audience staying through the overture. We secured a slender, long waisted Texas shoat named Phallas to act as greased pig, hired a band from "town," got a young woman with a tall head and a twenty-ounce pippin Adam's apple to read the Declaration of Independence, and then we began to cast about us for a good, strong-voiced orator who would remain tolerably sober til he had made his speech. We looked the ground over pretty well, and at last decided to call Col. Braley, of the Sage Hen ranch. I call him Col. Braley because it suits my purpose better to call him Col. Braley. The gentleman to whom I refer is still alive, and I would like to be also. Therefore I call him Col. Braley.

We wrote to the colonel a pleasing note, in which we referred to his genial manners, his great popularity and his good sense upon matters that would naturally interest the people of our section. We told him that it was the general wish that he would favor us on that occasion, and we hoped for an early and satisfactory reply. In two days we received the following, as well as I am able to recall it at this date:

SAGE HEN RANCH, June 27, 1877.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Fourth of July Committee:

Your favor regarding a speech upon the grounds near the old Buffalo Waller, on the Fourth of July, is received. I am no speaker on such an occasion as that, and I therefore beg to be excused. There is only about one man out of ten thousand that can make a good Fourth of July speech, and he is not, as a general thing, good for anything else.

In the first place, I don't seem to have the necessary voice. I have tried it once and did not succeed. The majority of the crowd went home mad because they couldn't hear, and the balance went home mad because they could. So I haven't got the voice. I can stand over on Roundup No. 2 and talk to the foreman on No. 4 easy enough, but I can't talk against a Sabbath school loaded with fire crackers.

Moreover, gentlemen, I am not a ready thinker under these circumstances. I am a man of fair business judgment or else I couldn't have accommodated 2,500 head of No. 1 4-year-olds worth $35 apiece in Omaha with nothing to begin on five years ago but a condemned government mule and a hopeful disposition. You will admit that as a financier I am no slouch, when I tell you that in all that five years the assessor has never got near enough to hold a conversation with me or to sock a valuation on my herd.

The trouble with me is that when I get up on my feet to talk to a large and perspiring throng of people my ideas are like a bunch of cattle in the stock yard, for instance. The whole blamed crowd wants to skin through the shute and be loaded into the same car at the same minute, or else they won't a condemned one of 'em agree to be loaded. That's the best way I can express it. I've either got ideas enough to load a car, all at once, faster than I can get rid of 'em, or else I can't think of a blamed thing. Still, continuing to carry out the comparison, gentlemen, I want to say to you that I have also had a big fat, 5-year-old Maverick idea got wedged into my head when I tried to make a speech, and it would neither go ahead into the speech nor back out for five minutes. You can fancy a man of my position in society standing up before a mob of his fellow men and twisting the tail of a reluctant idea till he is red in the face!

I love my country, gentlemen, and love the dear old flag. You don't hear me brag about it, though it's nothing to be ashamed of, but I have fought for this flag when, if I had listened to the voice of conscience, I would have gone to Canada. I have marched along the endless dusty roads of the south with a seal brown musket on my shoulder for days and days without seeing anything to shoot. I have slept in the bottom of a trench night after night, expecting every time that I would take my breakfast next morning in the New Jerusalem. All this I have done because I thought it was right, and I think so yet; but I am not a good off-hand extemporaneous speaker on the Fourth of July.

I am with you in the spirit on that day. I will bow my head when you open the exercises with prayer. I will hum with you in a low, gutteral tone when the glee club sings "America." I will pause in my labors while the Declaration of Independence is being hissed out through the clenched teeth of a young, scared to death elocutionist, who seems to be afraid of the cars. I will suffer with you in spirit through the long, hot oration, filled with patriotism and perspiration, but I cannot be there. I will think of you, and I will indorse anything you may say regarding Freedom from her mountain heights or Starry Banner Free, or any of those things, but to stand up before my fellow-citizens and fan the air with the tail of an alpaca duster and yell my larynx loose over a large, irregular mass of freedom, of which we have more than we need and don't know where to put it or how to use it, is out of my line.

I beg leave to subscribe myself, yours in the interest of the great, ungifted majority, who do the work but cannot fluently jerk the Roman-nosed bird of freedom.

FRIENDLY ADVICE TO CLEVELAND.

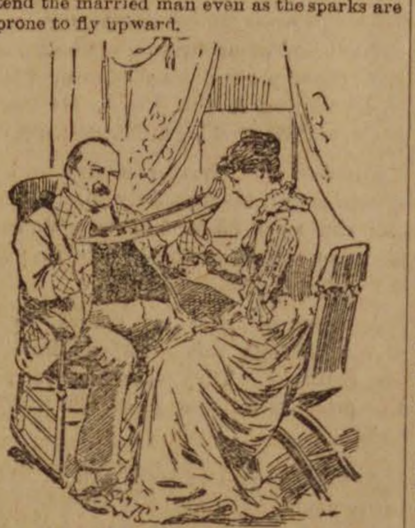
A Letter of Bill Nye's Which Has Just Seen the Light.

HUDSON, Wis., June 3, 1886.

The Hon. Grover Cleveland, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: You have now assumed a new duty and taken upon yourself an additional responsibility. Not content with the great weight of national affairs sufficient to crush any other pachyderm, you have cheerfully and almost gleefully become a married man. While I cannot agree with you politically, Grover, I am forced to admire your courage.

This morning a new life opens out to you—the life of a married man. It is indeed a humiliating situation. To be a president of the United States, the roustabout of a free people, is a trying situation; but to be a newly-married president, married in the full glare of official life, with the eye of a divided constituency upon you, is to place yourself where nerve is absolutely essential. I am surprised, Grover, honestly, as between man and man, that you should have tried to add housekeeping to all this other agony. Had you been young and tender under the wings I might have understood it; but you must admit, in the quiet and sanctity of your own home, Grover, that you are no gosling. You have arrived at man's estate. You have climbed the barbed-wire fence which separates the fluff and bloom and blossom and bumble-bees of impetuous youth from the yellow fields and shadowy orchards of middle life. You now stand in the full glare of life's meridian. You are entering upon a new experience. Possibly you think that because you are president the annoyance peculiar to the life of a new, green groom will not reach you. Do not fool yourself in this manner. Others have made the same mistake. Position, wealth, and fame cannot shut out the awkward and trying circumstances which attend the married man even as the sparks are prone to fly upward.



After the affairs of the nation.

It will seem odd to you at first, Mr. President, after the affairs of the nation have been put aside for the day and the government fireproof safe locked up for the night, to go up to your boudoir and converse with a bride with one corner of her mouth full of pins. A man may write a pretty fair message to congress, one that will be accepted and printed all over the country, and yet he may not be fitted to hold a conversation with one corner of a woman's mouth while the other is filled with pins. To some men it is given to be great as statesmen, while to others it is given to be fluent conversationalists under these circumstances.

Mr. President, I may be taking a great liberty in writing to you and touching upon your private affairs, but I noticed that everybody else was doing it, and so I have nerved myself up to write to you, having once been a married man myself, though not under the same circumstances. When I was married I was only a plain justice of the peace, plodding quietly along and striving to do my duty. You was then sheriff of your county. Little did we think in those days that now you would be a freshly married president and I the author of several pieces which have been printed in the papers. Little did we think then, when I was a justice of the peace in Wyoming and you a sheriff in New York, that to-day your timothy lawn would be kicked all to pieces by your admiring constituents, while I would be known and loved wherever the English language is tampered with.

So we have risen together, you to a point from which you may be easily observed and flayed alive by the newspapers, while I am the same pleasant, unassuming, gentlemanly friend of the poor that I was when only a justice of the peace and comparatively unknown.

I cannot close this letter without expressing a wish that your married life may be a joyous one, as the paper of Laramie has said, "and that no cloud may ever come to mar the horizon of your wedded bliss." (This sentence is not my own. I copy it verbatim from a wedding notice of my own written by a western journalist who is now at the Old Woman's home.)

Mr. President, I hope you will not feel that I have been too forward in writing to you personally over my own name. I mean to do what is best for you. You can truly say that all I have ever done in this way has been for your good. I speak in a plain way sometimes, but I don't beat about the bush. I see that you do not want to have any engrossed bills sent to you for a couple of weeks. That's the way I was. I told all my creditors to withhold their engrossed bills during my honeymoon, as I was otherwise engrossed. This remark made me a great many friends and added to my large circle of creditors. It was afterward printed in a foreign paper and explained in a supplement of eight pages.

We are all pretty well here at home. I may go to Washington this fall if I can sell a block of stock in the Pauper's Dream, a rich gold claim of mine in Elk mountain. It is a very rich claim, but needs capital to develop it. (This remark is not original with me. I quote from an exchange.)

If I do come over to Washington, do not let that make any difference in your plans.

Remember that I have not grown cold toward you just because you have married. You will find me the kind of a friend who will not desert you just when you are in trouble. Yours, as heretofore,

BILL NYE.

P. S.—I send you to-day a card receiver. It looks like silver. Do not let your wife bear on too hard when she polishes it. I was afraid you might try to start into keeping house without a card receiver, so I bought this yesterday. When I got married I forgot to buy a card receiver, and I guess we would have frozen to death before we could have purchased one, but friends were more thoughtful, and there were nine of them among the gifts. If you decide that it would not be proper for you to receive presents, you may return the card receiver to me or put it in the cellar-way till I come over there this fall.

Her Fan.

Here in the parlor, cool and sweet,
Scented with roses from the garden,
I wait the coming of her feet,
And vainly try my heart to harden.

For she is cold—ah, here's a fan
Lying outstretched upon the table,
A dainty toy from far Japan—
It must be yours, fair, blue-eyed Mabel.

Upon it four old mandarins
Travel about at fearful angles,
Umbrellas balanced on their chins,
And 'round their necks great golden bangles.

Here, just beneath this purple cloud,
Is one blank space—and shall I fill it?
The thoughts I dare not speak aloud
My pen may tell her, if I will it.

It shall. Though never good at verse,
For four short lines I'm surely able—

* * * * * *

There! Certainly I have seen worse.
That's a neat line, "Coy, charming Mabel!"

(I hear her step! And now the "swish"
Of silken skirts the staircase trailing.
When will she see it? Oh, I wish—
My courage all at once is failing.

I'll brave it out.) "Miss Clair, I found
This fan and wrote some nonsense on it.
Perhaps you will read it. I'll be bound
You'll laugh at my poor awkward sonnet.

But if you knew—could I but show—"
(Can it be true that smile she smothers?)
"Oh, thank you. She'll be pleased, I know;
For, Mr. Bond, that fan's my mother's."

A Tough Goose.

Mr. N. Vickary, the well known taxidermist, of Lynn, tells a story of the old colored man John Johnson, a celebrated Lynn character. John happened into the shop one day just after Mr. Vickary had been skinning a large bald eagle. Thinking to have a little sport, Mr. V. asked John if he would like a nice goose for his dinner the next day.

"I tank you a hundred million times ef you gib me de goose, 'deed I will," John exclaimed; and in due time the skinless body of the eagle was wrapped in a newspaper, and Johnson started off with it under his arm, still volubly expressing his gratitude.

About a week after Mr. V. met Johnson on Union street, and asked him how he liked the goose he had given him.

"Dat goose," said Johnson, showing his ivories. "Dat war de toughest goose. I's declar' dat mus' have been fader to all the ganders. I biled that goose, an' I parbiled him, den I biled him again, but I declar' dat ar wuz the chewinist bird me an' de ole woman ever seed."

After telling him that there must have been some mistake in his method of cooking, they parted, till one day, as a large snowy owl was in preparation for stuffing, and Johnson happened to be going by, Mr. V. called to him to come in. Johnson came hobbling in, when Mr. V. asked him if he did not want another goose, pointing to the owl lying on the bench with its skin drawn over its head.

Johnson looked suspiciously from Mr. V. to the bird, and scratching his woolly pate, remarked: "See here, boss, ef 'tain't no trubble, I's like to see de feet on dat goose afore I carries him to de ole woman."—Harper's Monthly.

Under Summer Skies.

It is pleasant lounging the summer away in idle, thoughtless solitude. There are no door bells on tents. No peddler haunts the leafy woods. No untimely caller distracts your mind from the dazed contemplation of the eternal, illimitable, restless, innumerable, exhaustless, sumless, unbounded, countless, immeasurable and incalculable swarms of outnumbering midges that in multitudinous legions teem in the air of June, ever fresh, empty and hungry. When you go into the wilderness to dwell in tents do not bring a gun. You don't need it. The guides will do all your shooting for you. Bring something to kill midges. Black flies you don't mind, because they disappear about the first of July. Mosquitoes of the Adirondack tribes you can kill with a club. But the midges. I'm sure I don't know what to tell you to bring. Camphor they like, although they prefer pennyroyal. When they can't get that they gladly season their victims with Pond's extract. Ammonia they dote upon. There is a mixture of sweet oil and tar that is infallible. It keeps the midges ten feet away from you. It also keeps everybody else in camp still further away. For yourself, while wearing this ointment you long to die, so that you may be buried on one side of the mountain and have your nose cut off and buried on the other, with a clothes pin on it, far, far away from yourself.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

MONSTER HARVESTERS.

ORIGIN OF THE GREAT LABOR-SAVING MACHINES OF THE WEST.

How Grain is Harvested on the Pacific Coast—Iron Titans Which Wade Through Grain Fields, Cutting, Thrashing and Bagging all at Once.

The constantly changing manner of harvesting grain in the last quarter of a century is worth recording. While the east has been making great strides in improvements the far west has not been behind in modes adapted to its wants. In the last three or four years a class of monster harvesting machines has appeared. They cut, thrash and sack the grain as they move over the field, dropping the filled sacks upon the ground, the grain being cleaned ready for market. The real origin of these great labor-saving machines has been known to very few. Even the present manufacturers are most of them in the dark on the subject.

In a recent extended tour over Oregon, Washington territory and Idaho I have devoted considerable time and expense to gathering facts, and can now locate the first invention in Oregon. As long ago as 1853 one Luper, residing near Lebanon, Ore., built and used a machine which pushed ahead of the horses and ran the cut grain off in a swath on the ground at the left of the machine, leaving it to be gathered and carried to the stack or thrasher. From this sprang the header and elevator now so well known on the Pacific coast. It is substantially the same machine, but with a spout that carries the grain to large header beds on wagons by which it is transported to the stack.

COMBINED HEADER AND THRASHER.

While the Luper machine was in operation Medders Vanderpoel, also residing near Lebanon, conceived the idea of attaching some sort of a thrasher to it. He built a combined machine in 1855, using it through one harvest. It was run almost entirely by belt, and the thrashing was done by friction, the thrashed grain falling into a box and being winnowed afterward. The machine did fair work, but was not durable. It gave out after cutting 700 or 800 acres of grain. In 1860 Mr. Vanderpoel made improvements and changed the manner of handling the grain. After a season's run, however, he was not pleased with his improvements. In 1863 and 1864 he went back to very nearly his first invention. Having obtained patents he constructed another machine. At the age of 81 years he takes great pleasure in exhibiting the model at his farmhouse near Lebanon. The machine required ten good horses or mules and three men to operate it. When properly handled it would cut from twelve to eighteen acres of grain per day. Nothing was ever done with it in a business way. It ran three or four years, cutting a large acreage, when it was thrown aside. But it attracted attention, and others began to experiment in search of a good combined harvester and thrasher.

The first to go to work in earnest and expend money were W. G. and L. T. Davis, of McMinnville, Ore. They began work in 1866 and obtained patents in 1867. These patents are in part the basis of the present numerous successful machines of this class. The Davis brothers first made two machines. These were used, one five years and the other six years. They cut many thousands of acres of grain in the great Willamette valley. At the farm residence of L. T. Davis I saw an old photograph of the machine. A few facts relating to the enterprise may interest your readers.

CUTTING A BROAD SWATH.

Ten animals and three men were used to run these machines. The average cut was eighteen acres of grain per day. The contrivance was a pull-and-push machine. Three animals were on the left and three on the right of the separator, and four in the lead. The operator stood on the left of the separator in the rear, the sacker platform being on the right. The thrasher was an ordinary belt machine, and the patents covered the peculiar and novel connections between it and the cutting apparatus.

The trials, troubles and losses of the Davis boys would make a good-sized volume. The worst of it is that they could not shape matters to carry on the business and retrieve their losses. About this time William H. Parish had been operating with a similar machine with limited success, as had also J. H. Robbins & Bro., all residing near the scene of the first invention. The Davis boys, being unable to go on, sold their patents to Mr. Parish and one J. C. Aikin, who again sold to California parties at Stockton. Since then several different kinds of the machines have been built there, as well as one at Benicia.

Nearly all the California machines of mark require from eighteen to twenty-eight animals and three or four men. They cut from twenty to forty acres of grain per day. The swath cut is from twelve to twenty-eight feet in width. The cost to put the grain in the sack with these machines is from 50 to 70 cents per acre, all told. They leave the straw and chaff scattered over the ground, unless in cases where "bunches" are used for carrying the straw and leaving it in piles so that the farmer can gather it.

These machines are now running in the great San Joaquin valley. I saw twenty in a two days' trip. The grain was down and tangled some, but they got through it easily. The yield is about nine sacks of two and a quarter bushels per acre for a very lare acreage in the middle district of the valley. The quality is fair and the price at railroad stations is 1 cent a pound.

These machines are not at all adapted to moist countries. They much resemble a traveling caravan as they rumble through the vast fields of ripe waving grain. The eastern tourist will not find in all the ramble a grander sight than the California traveling caravan harvesting outfit.—Oakland (Cal.) Cor. New York Sun.

Talking Over Their Indebtedness.

About the year 1837 I happened to be in Vicksburg. I heard an old gentleman in one of the hotels giving one of his friends an account of a trip he had just made to New Orleans. "I went there," said he, "to make some arrangement with my commission merchant about a bill of exchange he had accepted for me last year, and which had fallen due. He wanted me to pay him a part of the money. I was not able to do it. He then said I must get some solvent man to indorse a new bill and take up the old one. It was entirely out of my power to do that, and the first thing I knew he had me locked up in the calaboose. That is an institution especially adapted to the incarceration of foreign creditors.

"When I got in I saw some of the finest looking men and the best dressed men I had met in all New Orleans. They were smoking their cigars, drinking their champagne, and talking over their indebtedness. One of them had been calaboosed for $30,000, another for $100,000, and some as high as $250,000. I sat there like a poor man at a frolic, having nothing to say to anybody. At length an impudent little rascal slapped me on the shoulder and said: 'Well, my old rooster, how much were you jugged for?' I replied: '$1,500.' Turning round to his comrades, he exclaimed: 'Why, curse his pitiful soul, gentlemen, let us raise up the money and turn him out.'"—Courier-Journal Interview.

GREAT SWORDSMANSHIP.

Colonel Barras, in his book on "India and Tiger Hunting," gives the following description of wonderful swordsmanship: He was a fine-looking fellow in the prime of life, and notwithstanding the frightfully critical nature of what he was about to do, he moved about with perfect ease and calmness. In one hand he held a very long double-edged sword, sharp at the point, and with edges like razors. With the other hand he led his little son, a child aged about six years, who was also clearly well accustomed to what was about to follow. From the little fellow's evident enjoyment of the scene, it was plain that failure on the part of his father was a thing quite beyond the limits of his imagination. As soon as the usual preliminary ceremonies had been gone through, such as walking round and salaaming to the commanding officer and principal guests, the father placed his little boy in the centre of the circle, with a small lime (a kind of lemon) about twice the size of a walnut under his heel. Then, taking up his stand a few feet from the child, he grasped firmly the hilt of the sword, and began brandishing the weapon rapidly in the air. The blade was thin and finely-tempered, so that it could be seen to quiver and undulate throughout its entire length as it flashed in the rays of the setting sun. Suddenly the muscles of the athlete might be seen to stiffen themselves; an instant's pause, then a sudden and lightning-like swoop, and the lime under the boy's heel was safely severed.

I do not think many, even of the oldest inhabitants of the East, have often witnessed a performance equal to that which this havildar was wont to conclude his exhibitions. The boy having taken up his position as before, a small open box, about the size of those we use for tooth powder, was placed on the ground at his feet. It was filled with a black powder called soorma, used by the natives for darkening the eyelashes. Round this little box, and about the boy's head, the sword was now made to play with redoubled velocity. In the midst of the most dazzling passes, the weapon would dart toward the little box, and then reappear, steadily poised at the full stretch of the performer's arm, in front of the eyes of the child; then a sudden turn of the wrist, and a heavy dark line of powder was lying on one of the boy's lower eyelashes, placed there by the sharp point of the long sword. The same was then done to the other eye. This feat was performed weekly, always with undeviating success, and was certainly the most wonderful instance of nerve and steadiness that I ever witnessed.

NO NEED TO HURRY.

Stories of Travers are always in order. There is a good one about something he said to James Gordon Bennett once upon a time. That gentleman, upon the occasion named, was standing one afternoon in front of the Union Club, when a particularly annoying bootblack came up and asked if he didn't want a shine. Bennett turned away and made no answer. The boy strolled off, but came back presently with his former question. The owner of the Herald paid no attention whatever to his tormentor, and the boy, after repeating the request a couple of times said: "Say, mister, will you tell us what time it is?" Mr. Bennett took out his watch and replied that it was five minutes to 5 o'clock. "All right," said the boy, preparing for a retreat; "when she strikes 5 o'clock you go and soak your head." Then he ran down the street, and Bennett, forgetting himself for the moment, started after him with the intention of cuffing his ears. They had gone about thirty paces when Bennett ran into the arms of Travers. "W-w-what's the matter?" stammered Travers. "Do you see that infernal boy?" responded Bennett, interrogatively. "C-c-certainly," observed Travers. "Well," went on Bennett, hotly, "he told me to soak my head at 5 o'clock." Travers pulled out his watch. "W-w-well, you needn't be in such a devil of a hurry; w-w-why, you've got four minutes and a half yet to do it in."

FISH THAT BEG.

Through the last "defile" about halfway below Sampanago, on the borders of Upper Burmah, is a small rocky island which in the dry season is connected with the shore by a narrow spit of sand. In the bay thus formed lie enormous dog-fish which are perfectly tame. Dr. Williams, in his book called Through Burmah to Western China, relates: "As we drew near the island, I asked the boatman to call the fish. He hesitated, until assured that we had something to give them to eat, but at length slightly ruffled the water with his outspread fingers, and called with a coaxing voice, 'Tit-tit, tit-tit!' when, to our extreme astonishment, in less than half a minute large mouths from ten inches to a foot in diameter rose up to the gunwale of the boat, gaping for alms. They were a kind of dog-fish, some of them at least five feet in length and very broad at the shoulders. Twenty or thirty crowded to the side of the canoe, and, though not clamorous, were ludicrously energetic in their begging, some of them rising so far out of the water as to lose their balance and topple back with a splash on their neighbors. So tame were they that they allowed us to stroke their backs."

The best thing for the complexion is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It brings the bloom of health to the wan cheek.

THE FIRST STRIKE.

The first strike among our working people, I think, was at Dover, N. H., in 1827 or 1828. The Cocheco works were established in 1820, and the operatives were almost entirely American girls, who deemed that weaving and spinning was better than farming, and became "factory girls" on the erection of the works at Dover Falls. A small factory up the river was No. 1, and the works at the falls were Nos. 2, 3 and 4, as I believe they are at the present time.

Everything went on spinningly and smoothly until the year of which I write. There were exactions on the part of the corporation that the independent spirits of the fair spinners and weavers could not brook. A rule was made that the great gates should be shut at bell-ringing, and those who were late should go through the counting-room passageway to be marked for reduction of pay, largely disproportioned to the delinquency. This gave great offense, other measures awakened opposition, and on a fine morning the mills were idle. Every operative was out, leaving the overseers to run them alone.

They met at some convenient square, and, forming a procession, with a band, and bearing the American flag, they paraded the town, under a leader whom I knew well a year later, and a stalwart manly guard of one for their protection. The corporation came down at once, the offensive rules were withdrawn for the time, and everything went on harmoniously. But there arose, again, threats of war between James F. Curtis, a new agent, and Mill No. 2. He was not a fortunate selection for the office, as he had been a sea captain, and endeavored to introduce ship's discipline among his crew of girls. It would not work, and a general irritation prevailed.

The climax was reached when he ordered the windows of No. 2 to be nailed down. This was done over night, and in the morning, when they found out what had been done, and one of the loom girls had fainted, their anger knew no bounds. A strike in that mill was the consequence. I saw the excited crowd from an upper window opposite, and such a clatter of tongues has not been heard since Babel. Agent Curtis was sent for, and went among them, angry at first, but that bird wouldn't fight, and he came down to coaxing, begging them to return, arguing the necessity for the nailing down, which excited them the more, until he compromised the matter by allowing the windows to be opened part way. Other inducements were given, and they returned to their work, but during the altercation with him they had spotted his black coat with cotton locks until he looked like a new description of leopard.

GOOD ORANGES.

To very many an orange is an orange, the only variation distinguishable being is size and corresponding price, while those who know the difference between Florida, Seville and Messina oranges are considered experts. The "Florida Catechism" tells us better than that. We learn from it that there are over thirty varieties of sweet oranges, not to mention the "natural stock," which is a larger and handsomer fruit than the sweet orange, and is excellent for orangeade and marmalade, but being very sour, is seldom shipped North. The medium sizes are apt to be the choicest, and probably the very sweetest orange that is marketed is the rusty-coated and rather ill-looking orange, which might be considered inferior by an amateur. Furthermore: "The way to detect oranges is to 'helt' them in your hands; pick out the thin-skinned, heavy fruit, and you are all right." The light-weight fruit is apt to be juiceless—a condition caused either by a slight freezing while on the tree, or, more probably, by the poverty of the soil in which it grew. All this applies to the sweet oranges.

The "kid glove" oranges are grown in Florida from two stocks brought, respectively, from China and Tangiers. Hence they are called Mardarin and Tangerine oranges. Both are small; the skin is loose and easily removed, and the sections fall apart so readily that a lady can eat one without soiling her gloves; hence the name. Some other interesting bits of information may be picked out from this "Catechism." It is not generally known, for instance, that "an orange that is entirely dead ripe in December will hang on the tree until March, and is ready at any time to be picked and shipped;" while so far from deteriorating, "the longer they hang on the trees the sweeter they grow," and Florida oranges, purchased in February and March, are therefore apt to be better than those procured early in the season. Again, the notion that to know what an orange is really like, one must go where the oranges grow, appears to be a popular fallacy, as we are told that "the orange picked from the tree is no riper or better than the orange on the fruit stalls in the North.

HAY FEVER SUFFERERS.—The number of people annually afflicted with this most annoying malady seems to be greatly on the increase.  The editor of this journal is an annual victim, and, with a view to discover a specific cure, has tried numerous remedies. Of these Ely's cream Balm is by all odds the quickest and most satisfactory, two applications greatly allaying the usual symptoms in the nose and eyes. We would recommend its use by all subject to hay fever, and we gladly bear unsolicited testimony to it its efficacy in our own case. —Media, Pa., Record.

THE BAKER FAMILY.

Baker is well known as a common surname. As a trade description, the word has not, in some parts of Yorkshire, been common until within the last few years, the reason being that baking has been in those districts mainly a domestic operation. The cognomens "Bagster" and "Baxter" would seem to point to the former agency of women in professional as well as home baking, for they answer to "bakester," the feminine form of "baker," as "spinster" is of "spinner;" but the feminine termination "ster" lost its distinctive meaning in the fourteenth century, and we shall presently find it appended to names indicating pursuits which could scarcely have been followed by females at any time. The word "pantry"—originally De la Panterie—represents the officer having charge of the bread store in large establishments of olden times. If there be now no calling exactly answering to this, we may, by the exercise of a little fancy, trace a parallel to it in an existing one which was certainly unknown when his became a surname—that of the "relieving officer," the agent and representative of our modern poor laws, so to speak—who keeps the bread-room established by statute, and opens it for the needy of the great national household. In the cognominal oddity Bacchus we have the Baker again, though in disguise. The word refers to him as a resident or worker at the mediæval bakehouse: "thus the provider of bread has assimilated himself to the tutelar divinity of wine," and we may at this point appropriately pass for a moment from occupations connected with the staff of life to those relating to what working men have jocularly called "life itself," taking that expression to stand for alcoholic refreshment in general.

The true secret of success is merit. This is so with Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, entirely free from opiates, poisons and narcotics, and which has received the public endorsement of physicians and chemists everywhere. Twenty-five cents.

Cabbage plants have been eaten down at the roots this season by a maggot which can be got rid of by a solution of boiled burdock leaves and stalks.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.—The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them. Read the abundant evidence of its curative powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

Unknown to Others

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared with the greatest skill and care, by pharmacists of education and long experience. Hence it is a medicine worthy of entire confidence. If you suffer from scrofula, salt rheum, or any disease of the blood, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, or kidney and liver complaints, catarrh or rheumatism, do not fail to try

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE AMENDMENT to the constitution of Massachusetts having passed, by vote of the people, allowing precinct voting in towns, the Legislature of 1886, by an act signed June 2d, has made provision for such voting in definite terms. It is not obligatory on towns to vote in this manner, but they may or may not accept the provisions of the act. We learn that the matter will be brought up at the town meeting which is soon to be called, giving the citizens of Peabody an opportunity to say whether or not they will establish voting by precincts in town.

The chief advantage of such voting is the convenience to the voters in towns where the population is scattered. In Peabody, for instance, it would not be necessary for the voters of South and West Peabody to come to the square to cast their votes for State and National officers. The tendency would naturally be, therefore, to call out a larger vote. It would certainly, do so, on a stormy day, when people from remote parts of any town are kept from the polling places. Many voters will not make an extra effort to exercise the right and duty of citizenship. This is to be regretted, but the stern fact remains. It is, therefore, somewhat necessary on the part of the State to make the places of polling, and the methods of voting, as easy of access as is possible.

In order that our readers may understand more fully the necessary steps to be taken, we give in full the first section of the act. After the voters of the town have accepted its provisions and the Selectmen have complied with the requirements of this section, the law provides for wardens at each precinct, prescribes their duties and those of the Board of Registrars in regard to precincts, very much as has been the law regarding voting in cities by wards. These things will come after the precincts have been established, if it is judged wise on the part of the town to establish them. Section 1 is as follows:

"The Selectmen of every town which shall accept the provisions of this act shall, within sixty days thereafter, divide said town into convenient voting precincts for the holding of all meetings for the choice of officers elective by the people, except town officers. They shall define said precincts by natural or artificial monuments and boundaries, and number the same either by letters or figures, and shall make report of their doings, including therein such monuments and boundaries, the numbers of such precincts and the number of legal voters in each precinct; to the next town meeting. Such report may be modified or amended at the meeting duly called to act thereon, and when accepted, either in its original or amended form, by a majority of the legal voters then present and voting thereon, shall become operative, and thereafter all meetings for the election of officers, except town officers, shall be held in the precincts established by said town; but no such report shall be acted upon at any meeting unless the same is filed in the office of the town clerk seven days at least before said meeting. Such precincts may be changed at any meeting duly called for the purpose, if the Selectmen shall have filed in the office of the town clerk, seven days at least before said meeting, a report of the contemplated changes, giving monuments, boundaries and numbers of the contemplated precincts and the number of voters in each as determined by the last preceding registration of the voters as corrected; but no changes, other than those proposed in such report, shall be made at such meeting. Within ten days after the division of any town into precincts, or of any change in the number of such precincts, the town clerk shall give notice thereof in writing to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, stating, therein, the number of precincts then existing in said town."

It will be seen, therefore, that in case this town desires to establish voting by precincts to be used this fall, it is necessary that action should be taken as early as possible. The division must be made by the Selectmen, reported back to the town, and accepted by them before it can go into effect. The Selectmen can take the full sixty days limit, before reporting, or do it in less time. If they should report speedily, there is ample time. If they should take the full sixty days, there would be some doubt about the establishment of the precincts, as after such establishment the Board of Registrars must post up voting lists, arranged by precincts, thirty days, at least, before the time of election. We hope our readers will consider the matter and be prepared to vote intelligently when the time for the acceptance or non-acceptance of the provisions of the act comes before them.

THE ANTI-SALOON Conference, as it is called, to which considerable attention has been drawn the past week, shows that there is progress in the sentiment of the people of this State in favor of temperance, and in favor of closing up or restricting the saloons in the different parts of the State. A leaning in this direction had become plainly manifest in the changed manner in which the liquor law of the State is being enforced. Our neighboring city of Salem is a conspicuous example of this. The movement is sneered at by our democratic friends, as an attempt on the part of the republican party to bid for the prohibitory vote. There ought to be no necessity for this, if it were true. While the republican party has been voted against by the radical temperance people, while there has been nothing too severe which these people could say against it, while their persistence in their "hobby" even at a national election caused the defeat of James G. Blaine—despite all this, all the prohibitory legislation, all the legislation against the dram shop in this State, has been accomplished by the republican party. This party has not been ready to carry out the fanatical ideas of some of these radical leaders of prohibition. We doubt if it is ready to do so to-day. But the democratic party is not ready to carry out any of their ideas. It believes in license—first, last and all the time.

If the republican party were ready to accept the resolution passed by the Anti- Saloon Conference, in favor of absolute constitutional prohibition in Massachusetts, we presume the prohibition people, including the W. C. T. U., would verily think the millenium had come. But it is not ready to accept it. Further, we very much doubt if it is wisdom to make any change in the local option law now existing in this State. The experience of every State on the liquor question is that no law can be enforced that is not sustained by public opinion. Public opinion on the matter of constitutional prohibition of liquor is divided. And in this State, under the local option law, where a town like ours, for instance, votes prohibition and the vote is sustained by public opinion, it can be enforced. Our town is an exception to the prohibitive enforcement of the law in many parts of the State. A prohibitory law, not enforced, means free rum. The state of Vermont is under a prohibitory law, so also is New Hampshire. But there is no attempt to enforce the law. The same also may be said of cities and towns in this state—both license and no license. Under constitutional prohibition we can see no hope of any improvement.

In our judgment, the Law and Order League, composed of men of all parties, men who believe in license and prohibition, but who unite on the common ground of "obedience to existing law" is doing more for the suppression of the saloons, and will do more in the future than any tinkering of the laws of the State, or any lengthy resolutions in favor of constitutional prohibition, by any party. It has done more in this town in the short period of its existence, than all the temperance organizations, united, have accomplished. The temptation of an open saloon door is the greatest obstacle to all reform in the temperance cause. These doors have been closed in this town under the local option law. They can be closed in any town under the present law, backed by a moral sentiment in favor of such closing. What more can constitutional prohibition do?

IT CANNOT be denied that there is a prevailing sentiment, throughout all parties, that the present Congress has been wofully inefficient. The democratic majority in the House have proved themselves incompetent to deal with the issues which have presented themselves; they have been without leadership and have not been in agreement among themselves. The necessity is plainly manifest that in the coming fall elections there should be an awakening among the republican party and an election of staunch republicans to the floor of the next Congress.

The tariff bill proposed by the leaders of the present House would make it impossible for this country, with the movement in favor of higher wages for labor, to compete at all with the markets of the Old World. With the republican party rests the hope of the workingman, as far as protection to American industry, meaning better wages and constant employment to the laboring man, consists. The platform of the labor party, as far as they have one, is in harmony with that of the republican party in this respect. It has nothing in common with the democratic party.

We hope to see this district represented in the next Congress by an able and earnest republican. Not only that, but we hope to see other districts in Massachusetts, now represented by democrats, send a republican to the next Congress. In the sixth district, we hope that sufficient harmony may prevail to elect a republican representative.

It is not necessary, in condemnation of the inaction of Congress, to condemn entirely the action of President Cleveland. Nor do we believe, from present indications, that there would be less agreement with him on the part of a republican Congress than at present exists between the President and the leaders of the democratic party. President Cleveland has earnestly desired to be president of the whole country; to be guided by motives which should place him above party. In this he has had the sympathy and encouragement of the party who worked hardest in the campaign to defeat him. Measured by the acts of the present democratic Congress, it would be far better that the Government should be administered by democratic president and a republican Congress, rather than a Congress of the same political party with the chief magistrate.

THE RECENT letter of President Cleveland seems to be pleasing to the "mugwump" party, and is a document capable of almost any construction. The general drift of it appears to be that office holders should keep out of politics. This is simply impossible. We never supposed that holding an office under government deprived a man of his rights and duties as an American citizen. One of these duties is the attending of primary conventions. The absence from such conventions on the part of too many is the cause of the nomination of so many men who are unfit for the office to which they are nominated. Why should an office holder be an absentee because he is an office holder? But we anticipate the document is a sop thrown to the mugwumps. There will be just as much participation in politics as before. It is only the republicans who are removed for "offensive partisanship." It would be a thing past comprehension to see a democrat removed for a like cause. The following is President Cleveland's letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 14, 1886.

To the Heads of Departments in the Service of the General Government:—

I deem this a proper time to especially warn all subordinates in the several departments, and all office holders under the general government, against the use of their official positions in attempts to control political movements in their localities. Office holders are the agents of the people, not their masters. A just discrimination in this regard between the things a citizen may properly do and the purposes for which a public office should not be used, is easy in the light of a correct appreciation of the relation between the people and those intrusted with official place, and a consideration of the necessity under our form of government of political action free from official coercion.

You are requested to communicate the substance of these views to those for whose guidance they are intended.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

THE KNIGHTS of Labor do not countenance or uphold such acts of violence as were committed in Salem yesterday. No help either to the organization or the community can come from such outrages. Yet, in times of labor troubles, as has been seen everywhere, there is a small minority whose fiery disposition seems not to be under control. It is for the good of the Knights of Labor that they should use every effort to prevent violence. Only by the observance of law and order will they have the respect of the community. It should be known openly, and without prevarication, that the organization will sustain no member guilty of such assaults as were witnessed yesterday The laws must be enforced and order maintained.

THE REPUBLICAN State Central Committee have made no mistake in choosing Henry Cabot Lodge to preside over its deliberations at the coming State Convention. They will not listen to a prosy essay, but a stirring address on the living issues of the day. They have been equally fortunate in their choice of Boston as the place for such convention. It may do, occasionally, to visit some of the smaller hamlets, like Worcester and Springfield. But the insufficient hotel accomodations of either of these cities make the ordinary delegate regret that he ever came to the convention. Boston, on the contrary, can easily accommodate delegates to such a convention, without a suggestion being manifest of anything out of the ordinary course of events transpiring in the city.

The Republican party, this fall, has something before it other than the ratification of a "cut and dried" program of the State Central Committee. The response which was made by editors of Republican papers, to the query of the Sunday Globe, in favor of the nomination of Hon. William W. Crapo, of New Bedford, shows the strong feeling in his favor which exists in spite of rumors that he would not allow his name to be used. We regard this gentleman as the ablest and most fitting successor to the chair about to be vacated by Gov. Robinson. We think the strong sentiment, which is so manifest as be almost spontaneous, is a surprise even to his friends. It would seem to be a good time to bring his name forward for the support of the Convention. And we say this without any reflection on the ability of Lieut. Gov. Ames, who would make a magistrate of whom the Commonwealth need not be ashamed.

IT IS rumored that a petition is being circulated requesting the horse railroad companies to remove their offices to places where merchandise is not sold on Sundays. We have not seen such a petition, but presume it very likely that signatures could be obtained to such a one. We have not heard that the petition advises the horse railroads where to remove—something which would be very appropriate, as the present stations accommodate the public better than any place we have in mind which could be selected.

But the horse railroad corporations don't desire to remove the present stations, nor do they desire a station where their patrons can obtain nothing in the way of refreshments. In the first place, the people will not go to such a station, and in the second place it is for the convenience of those who patronize the roads on Sunday that there should be some place where a lunch can be obtained. The convenience of the public is, or should be, the convenience of the roads, and the stations where people are waiting are the places most appropriate for such refreshment. The people and the roads are very well served under the present arrangement. We see no necessity or wisdom in any change.

Any of our friends intending to visit New York, will be pleased to learn that their well known and favorite stopping-place, French's Hotel, is ready to receive them. The house has been in the hands of skilled workmen for months, and is completely renovated. Every hall and room has handsome Brussels carpets, and all the furniture is new, and of cherry or mahogany, while innumerable French plate looking glasses adorn the walls in every part of the house. The general dining-room is one of the largest and handsomest in the city, and is, with the private dining-rooms, elaborately furnished. All the sleeping-rooms have electric call bells used for awaking guests, without the old-fashioned kicking on the door, and ample ventilation. One of the new proprietors, Mr. F. W. Coleman, was for several years manager and part owner, and still owns one fourth of the Carrolton Hotel, Baltimore, and is the son of the late and far-famed Robert B. Coleman of the Astor House. The Hotel is kept on the European Plan, the price of rooms being $1 per day, and the bill of fare is equal to that of any first-class hotel in the city, though the prices are very moderate. See the Card of the Hotel in another column.

Watermelons are now arriving from the south in great abundance and in fine condition, and the papers as usual are making their abusive and libelous flings at the luscious fruit. If they do this just for the sake of being funny, we don't know that we can find any fault with their taking advantage of any opportunity for a joke (?) that presents itself; but if they thus abuse and traduce the watermelon in sober earnest, they display their ignorance of the healthful as well as grateful nature of the cucumis citrullus. We always feel moved to defend the watermelon when we see it traduced, for in days of severe sickness it has been to us, through the permission of a skillful physician, a delicious, refreshing and healthful friend, while at all times during its season it is our choice and safe dessert.—Boston Home Journal.

SPARKS.

The regular July meeting of the Board of Engineers was held last Wednesday evening. The regular order of business was transacted. It was voted to accept the proposals of William Pickering, Jr., & Co., for coal for the fire department, the figures being as follows: Cumberland, $4.15 per ton; No. 1 Nut, $4.75 per ton; No. 2 Nut, $4.50 per ton; English Cannell coal $13 per ton. The quantity was left to be decided by the Chief Engineer. Jos. Durkee was approbated a member of H. & L. 1. dating June 1st, in place of W. H. Joll transferred. James L. Perkins, Felix Cassidy, and J. W. H. Ferguson were approbated to Steamer 1, in place of J. F. Hart, George H. Carr and W. F. Littlefield, resigned. Engineer Johnson was authorized to put the gong formerly used at the Central Station on the carriage of Hose 4.

An alarm was pulled in from box 28 Wednesday night at 11.05 by officer Jones, by order of the Board of Engineers, in order that the alarm might be tested, and also to see how many of the men would respond. The Engineers went to the different houses to prevent the apparatus from going out, but Hose 1, owing to misunderstanding the orders, started and reported at the box at the pumping station in less than 5 minutes. Fully two thirds of the men responded in good season. Hose 5 turned out 11 out of 12 men inside of 7 minutes. Driver Frank Price of Hose 1, in coming down the sliding pole at the Central Station, lost his hold and fell to the floor, striking on his right heel, injuring it so badly that he has been laid up ever since. A hassock has been put at the bottom of the pole to avoid any more such accidents. George H. Fairbrother is acting as driver of Hose 1, until driver Price is able to resume his duties. The officer who pulled in the alarm was obliged to wait for over half an hour before his key could be released, as the engineer forgot him.

The Board of Engineers met last Friday evening and appointed a committee consisting of Engineers Buxton, Johnson and Reed to get out cards giving the location of boxes, and the keys, and to attend to other matters pertaining to the fire alarm.

Hook & Ladder No 1 received their new hats from Daly & Byran of Boston, Monday. They are a regulation service hat, painted black and red with black fronts.

Miss Lizzie French is employed at Parker's Lynn Dry Goods store. She has charge of all the mail orders.

Mr. John R. Loomis of New Haven, Conn., paid a visit to the grove on the borders of Brown's pond last Saturday. He owns a summer garden in New Haven and was thinking of opening one at Brown's grove. A branch track would be run to the grove from the Lynn track and a small pleasure steamer would run on the pond. We trust the gentleman was so well impressed that he will carry his scheme into operation.

It is with regret and sadness that we state that Mrs. Susie (Buxton) Davis of So. Peabody is gradually failing. Her friends have little hopes of her recovery.

Mr. John Linehan has been gathering his summer cabbages. They are as large and solid heads as are often seen on winter cabbages.

The 12th annual re-union of the Needham family was held at Brown's Grove last Wednesday. Albert Needham of Lynn a lineal descendent of the John Needham who died in 1831 is president. Some 200 were present, among them Harvey Galeucia, 84 years of age. The next reunion was announced to be at some seashore resort.

Where Hours go Merrily.

The annual picnic of the South Society will be held Thursday, at Centennial Grove, Essex. A special train will leave the depot at 9.15. Tickets, 40 cts. for all, can be obtained at A. H. Whidden's store 18 Main street, or at the vestry Thursday morning. It is earnestly hoped that every member of the congregation that can do so, will attend. Liberal contributions are requested for the tables. Rolls and Coffee will be provided.

The picnic of the local Assemblies of the K. of L. of this town will be held at Canobie Lake, Windham N. H. to-morrow. Several hundred tickets have been sold and a large attendance is expected.

Mr. Chas. G. Williams, oldest son of Mr. Chas. A. Williams, of this town, was united in marriage last Wednesday evening to Miss Annie P. daughter of George R. Felt, at the home of the bride on Boston street. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. A. Phinney of the Methodist Church. The young couple were remembered with many useful and ornamental presents. After their return from a wedding tour to Pittsburg Pa. they will reside in Somerville.

Miss Jennie Strout was surprised at her home on Endicott street last Friday evening by a party of her young friends and the evening was spent socially.

The Peabody's visited Beverly last Saturday, and with only five of the regular team played a good game. McCarthy who pitches for the Peabody's struck out ten men in the first four innings and eighteen out of the twenty-four put out. Had he been properly supported in the field the result would have been different; the Peabody's earned a run in the eighth inning on a base hit by Cahill a steal to second and McCarthy's hard hit to right centre; the catching of M. McCarthy and P. Foster and the first base playing of J. McCarthy were the features. M. McCarthy, Dood and Hayman did the best batting. Score.

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Beverly,	1	0	0	0	0	5	0	0	2	—8

Earned runs, Peabody 1; two base hit Dodd and Hargrave. Struck out by McCarthy 18, by Robertson 6, first base on errors Beverly's 6 Peabody's 2; time 2.15.

The Red Men of Essex County and their families will hold a union picnic at Centennial Grove, Essex, next month.

The marine fireworks at the Willows last evening were an undoubted success. Large numbers of people from this town, as well as Salem and elsewhere, were present. There was also dancing at the Pavilion. It is a pleasure to note the increased accommodations being provided by the Naumkeag Street Railroad for the transportation of the public. At one time there were over fifteen cars in line. The Pavilion cafe, under Mr. Wentworth, is also receiving a large patronage, which it certainly deserves. Mr. Wentworth is serving one of the finest fish dinners on the coast.

The following concert will be given to-morrow morning on the Square by the Salem Brass Band.

Two base ball clubs called the "Strikers" and the "Lockouts" played base ball all day yesterday. In the forenoon the Strikers beat the Lockouts 56 to 33. In the afternoon the game was a tie.

It was said by the wisest and wealthiest king of ancient times, that there was nothing new under the sun. That saying might have been true in his day and generation, but it is certainly does not apply to these progressive times where improvement and advancement is the order of the day. Old things have been done away and all things become new. Old vehicles have been discarded and new ones of better style and convenience substituted. This fact has become apparent by our friend the phosphate manufacturer, who has shelved his two old animal hearses and put upon the road the most magnificent new one in existence, from the manufactory of Teel & Hill of Medford, Mass. This hearse is constructed after his own pattern for convenience and durability, of the very best material and workmanship, and will hold four horses without inconvenience at a load. We are pleased to notice this indication of the increasing prosperity of our friend who is equal to any emergency in his line of business. His old hearses are on exhibition in a building at the head of Central street, together with his famous Monroe buggy, the first of its kind that was built after Noah left the Ark, and all his other valuable relics of antiquity at a nickle a ticket. By this means he hopes to realize sufficient to meet the expense of storage.

Children's Kid Newport Button and Ties only 75 cents at Nugent's.

The young workers connected with the Unitarian Society are spending the day at Asbury Grove.

A sufficient number of Grand Army people in Boston and its vicinity have already purchased tickets at the Hoosac Tunnel line's office for San Francisco to fill 21 parlor cars. The demand is still in progress and steadily increasing. The trains by this route will be started in sections on the 22d inst., each section being drawn by two locomotives.

INDIGESTION

To strengthen the stomach, create an appetite, and remove the horrible depression and despondency which result from Indigestion, there is nothing so effective as Ayer's Pills. These Pills contain no calomel or other poisonous drug, act directly on the digestive and assimilative organs, and restore health and strength to the entire system. T. P. Bonner, Chester, Pa., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills for the past 30 years and am satisfied I should not have been alive to-day, if it had not been for them. They

Cured

me of Dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since." L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills, for Liver troubles and Indigestion, a good many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action." Richard Norris, Lynn, Mass., writes: "After much suffering, I have been cured of Dyspepsia and Liver troubles

By Using

Ayer's Pills. They have done me more good than any other medicine I have ever taken." John Burdett, Troy, Iowa, writes: "For nearly two years my life was rendered miserable by the horrors of Dyspepsia. Medical treatment afforded me only temporary relief, and I became reduced in flesh, and very much debilitated. A friend of mine, who had been similarly afflicted, advised me to try Ayer's Pills. I did so, and with the happiest results. My food soon ceased to distress me, my appetite returned, and I became as strong and well as ever."

FRANKLIN SQUARE, N. Y.

A CURIOUS BOOK.

The most curious book in the world is one that is neither written nor printed. Every letter of the text is cut into the leaf, and as the alternate leaves are of blue paper, it is as easily read as the best print. The labor required and the patience necessary to cut each letter may be imagined. The work is so perfect that it seems as though done by machinery, but every character was made by hand. The book is entitled "The Passion of Christ," and is now kept at a museum in France.

THE ELDER GOT AHEAD.

Old Potiphas Bledsoe, of the Southern Tier, is an authority on horses and ministers, and this is one of his experiences: "I never knowed Deacon Expeters to git beat but onct in my life, and that was done by Elder Smiles, who worked the Tioga circuit down in Pennsylvany. This ere Expeters had a bay filly that Elder Smiles wanted, an' he offered Expeters a big brown gelding which 'ud weigh about twelve hundred, even up for the filly. You see the elder wanted that filly mighty bad to ride on his circuit. But this ere Expeters asked the elder $14 boot money, an' the elder hemmed an' hawed 'round considerable an' went off finally, an' there warn't no trade that day. But in about a week arter this ere Expeters dropped in on the elder in a careless way like, an' the question of the hoss trade cum up, and this ere Expeters says:

"'Wall, elder, I've bin athinkin' considerable about what we said the last time we talked hoss, an' the more I thought the more the Lord seemed to be whisperin' in my ear: 'Let the elder have the filly; let the elder have the filly.' The Lord seemed to kinder put it to me in the light of a duty I owed to the cause, an' so, elder, if you say so, the filly's your'n an' I'll take the gelding.'

"'Wall,' says the elder, 'if what you say is true, it would rather look like my duty to take the filly, considerin' all the circumstances, an' you don't know how grateful I am to you, Brother Expeters, an' if you say trade its a trade.'

"'All right,' said this ere Expeters, an' they shook hands on it.

"'I guess,' says the elder, 'I'll go over and git the filly now.'

"'That'll be all right,' says this ere Expeters, an' these two Christians went up to Expeters' paster, an' when they got to the bars they found the filly lying there as dead as a kit of pickled white-fish. The elder looked at the filly an' then he looked at Deacon Expeters, who was whittlin' the top of the fence an' chewin' a splinter. He never looked up at the elder onct.

"'That's my filly, ain't it?' said the elder quietly.

"'Yes, that's your hoss, Elder,' said this ere Expeters.

"'An' you still stick to it, that it's a trade?'

"'Yes, it's a fair trade,' said this ere Expeters, kinder dogged-like.

"'All right,' says the elder, 'I'll go up to your house an' git a claw hammer an' a cold chisel an' take the shoes off. I took 'em off the gelding which died last night afore the trade was consummated. The shoes appear to be 'about all I'm ahead on the deal."

SMART ENOUGH FOR THAT.

"I've turned that hired man off," said a Dakota farmer to his wife on coming into the house, "he was no good."

"What was the matter—he looked like a smart feller?"

"Oh, he was smart 'nough I s'pose, but he didn't know nothin' 'bout farmin'. The blamed fool didn't know 'nough to water the hosses. I told him to go out and clean up some seed wheat and I'm darned if he didn't ask me where the soap was."

"I don't know what'll become of the poor feller—'pears 'sif he couldn't get his livin' on a farm nohow."

"Oh, don't you worry 'bout him, Sary. He'll fool 'round till Spring and then go and start an agricult'ral paper somew'ere."

THE WORST SCARED OF THE TWO.

Mrs. Peterby is probably one of the homeliest women in the State of Texas, and her husband very often takes occasion to remind her of it.

"I got such a scare just now," said Mrs. Peterby a few days ago.

"What scared you, my dear?"

"I was in the kitchen just now when, all at once, a hideous looking tramp stuck his head in the window. Oh, I never was so scared in all my born days."

"Did the tramp get a good look at you, darling?"

"Yes, he looked me square in the face."

"Then I'll bet he was worse scared than you were."

150 MEALS FOR $1.00.—For an Infant. One of the reasons why people frequently try to get along without using prepared foods for their babies, is the high cost of many of them. This objection cannot be urged against Lactated Food. It is, in fact, a cheaper diet for infants than cow's milk, when it is necessary to purchase the latter. By using the large size of Lactated Food, the infant's food can be prepared at a cost of five cents per quart. A dollar box will furnish one hundred and fifty meals, or enough to last about one month. It is the safest food for infants, especially during hot weather, and every mother that cannot nurse her child should give it a trial. Sold by druggists.

THE BEST

boon ever bestowed upon man is perfect health, and the true way to insure health is to purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Mrs. Eliza A. Clough, 34 Arlington st., Lowell, Mass., writes: "Every winter and spring my family, including myself, use several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Experience has convinced me that, as a powerful purifier, it is very much superior to any other preparation of Sarsaparilla. All persons of scrofulous or consumptive tendencies, and especially delicate children, are sure to be greatly benefited by its use." J. W. Starr, Laconia, Iowa, writes: "For years I was troubled with Scrofulous complaints. I tried several different preparations, which did me little, if any, good. Two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla effected a complete cure. It is my opinion that this medicine is the best blood of the day." C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H., writes: "For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and unable to obtain relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I have taken several bottles, am greatly benefited, and believe it to be the best of blood purifiers." R. Harris, Creel City, Ramsey Co., Dakota, writes: "I have been an intense sufferer, with Dyspepsia, for the past three years. Six months ago I began to use

Blood

Purifier

It has effected an entire cure, and I am now as well as ever."

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER,

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made, We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bosuley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated courtesy whether anything is desired or not.

EXECUTIONS IN OLD FRANCE.

When executions were tolerably frequent and the bodies were left suspended in chains till they fell to pieces a small range of gallows did not suffice. M. Viollet le Duc, in his "Dictionary of French Architecture," devotes an article to the Fourches patibulaires, and gives several engravings of that of Montfaucon restored. The place of the gallows formed a quadrangular platform about 44 feet square. This platform was raised about six feet above the level of the soil, and was built over a vault to contain the bones as they fell from the gallows. Sometimes in addition to this vault it contained a chapel. On three sides of the platform were piers rising to the height of 30 feet, united by beams of solid oak at the top and in two heights below, so as to form three ranges or stories of gallows. Of these stone piers there were six on each side. One side of the quadrangle was left free for the stairs and for the block for executions with the sword. Thus, on the Montfaucon Fourches 45 men could hang simultaneously—or rather 90, as each opening was made to accommodate two persons. In the middle of the area was a stone with an iron ring in it, which could be raised to allow of the bones being pushed through the hole into the vault below. Access to this vault was also obtainable through a door at the bottom.

SAM JONES ON BASEBALL.

"I learned how to love a man once by a game of townball. When I was a boy we used to play townball. But I will tell you what, if I had a dog and he were to get out and look at a game of baseball an hour, I would go and kill him, I would. None of your baseball in mine. There is not a more corrupting thing this side of hell than baseball. Now, put that down. They all thought I had forgotten that. I never have had any use for it. The idea of a great big young buck twenty-five years old running all over creation for a ball. If your mother wanted you to cut a stick of wood she couldn't get you to do it to save her life, but you dress up in a fool's garb and run after a ball, the hottest day, until your tongue lolls out, you fool you.

"That aint all. It is one of the finest fields for gambling in America. And that is not all. I wouldn't wipe my feet on any crowd that would go out and play baseball on the Sabbath. Those are my sentiments. I couldn't put it in any more concise way than that. I don't know whether you agree with me or not; but you understand me, I reckon, don't you? I will let my boy play ball until he is ten years old, but after he is fifteen years old I believe I will work him out if I catch him at such foolishness as that."

SHOCKED THE DIVINE.

A prominent divine was the invited guest of Mr. B and family. Miss Alice, the charming daughter of the host, was gracing the festivity, and said impulsively:

"Oh, mother, I've been roasting up in my room all afternoon. It's hotter than—"

"Alice!" said the father, sternly.

"I say it's hotter than—"

"Alice!" said her mother, excitedly, and the divine looked at her in alarm.

"I say it's hotter than I ever saw it before," continued the young lady coolly, "and I just sat there without a thing on—"

"Oh, Alice," said her father, in alarm. This time the divine was thoroughly frightened.

"I just sat there without a thing on—"

"Oh, Alice!" said the mother, almost crying.

"I say I just sat there," continued the girl, not noticing the interruptions, "I just sat there without a thing on except my very lightest summer clothing, and read my Bible all the afternoon. Will you have some more soup, doctor?"

WHAT MORE HE COULD SAY.

One day a peripatetic missionary beggar was permitted to address a Sunday-school. He recounted the usual stories of heathen children, told of the missionary efforts in foreign lands, and kept talking at the restless little ones before him for more than two hours. At last he said: "And now, my dear children, I have told you all about those poor dear children and their needs in that far off heathen land. And now what more can I say?"

A bright eyed little girl, who was wearied almost to distraction, eagerly and quickly said to him:

"Please, mister, say amen."

THE LABOR TROUBLE.

The labor difficulties in this town have changed but little since our last issue. On Friday the Executive Committee of the K. of L. issued the following statement to the associated press.

In order to place before the public a correct statement of the present difficulty existing between the leather manufacturers of Salem and Peabody and their employes, we make this statement:—At a regular meeting of District Assembly 77, a resolution was introduced from the tanners and curriers of Salem and Peabody, asking that the Executive Board present a request to the leather manufacturers for a reduction of the hours of labor to 59 hours per week, the same as at present enjoyed by men doing the same work in other places. The district voted unanimously to grant their request.

In accordance with that vote, a representative of the board visited some of the manufacturers, commencing June 30, and continuing through the rest of the week: then finding it impossible to visit all the factories before July 12, the date set for begining upon the new time, the rest were notified through the mails. Although the request was couched in respectful language, the concluding words of which were:—"Trusting this request will be granted," etc , not one manufacturer had the courtesy to say yes or no. The district board, taking it for granted from the silence on the part of the manufacturer that they recognized the justice of our request, and had tacitly given consent, instructed the men to commence on the new time July 12.

As a consequence, these manufacturers, who organized themselves, issued a circular denying the men this right, and this is the cause of the present lockout. The District Board, having in view the welfare of the men and the prosperity of the community, threw aside all personal pride which they felt at this dictation, and sent a communication to the Manufacturers' Association asking for a conference, in order that we might explain the difficulties, and if possible, amicably settle the matter.

The reply to this was "that if we would withdraw all demands made to take effect July 12 they would withdraw the circular." After carefully considering the communication, we decided that it was only a shrewd move on the part of the Executive Committee of the Manufacturers' Association to repair the monstrous blunder they made in issuing the circular so hastily, if at all. The circular is condemmed by members of their own association who, having joined, are now bound as honorable men, to stand the consequences. We, knowing that our request (termed by their communication a demand) was just, did not think it advisable to withdraw it, only to make it again, therefore offered arbitration to determine which side was right, which they declined in a few lines, concluding by saying that further correspondence was useless.

The board having tried every honorable method of settlement, feel that they are not responsible for any loss that might result to any manufacturer on account of hides being in a perishable condition. It is by their own act in locking the men out that they made it possible. It can only be prevented by a withdrawal of the obnoxious circular and a recognition of the rights of the men to organize for the purpose of disposing of their own only marketable commodity--their labor--at what they consider a fair seller's price, and shall not be controlled by any syndicate formed only to prevent the seller from having a voice in determining the price of that which he has to sell as well as the purchaser.

If the Leather Manufacturers' Association or any af its members desire a settlement, we are ready at any time to confer with them, and if we disagree we are willing to leave the matter to disinterested parties; pending the discussion and decision, the factory or factories to resume operations at the usual hours in that factory, the decision of the arbitrators to be binding on both sides. As the last communication from the Leather Manufacturers' Association stated that further correspondence would be useless, we have nothing left but to await some sign from them that they recognize our request to meet us on the proposition above made.

Executive Board, D. A. 77 K. of L.
JOHN H. WALL, Chairman.

The above was followed by the statement of the manufacturers' side in the Sunday papers which is given below. These statements give a clear idea of the trouble and we hope for the prosperity of the town and all concerned to see it speedily settled:—

The press not seeming fully to have stated the present labor troubles in Salem and Peabody, we deem it only fair to ourselves and the public to give in brief the facts brought so severely home to us employers of labor, and on account of which we have felt compelled in order to save our business from positive ruin to take the stand we have. Some months since we yielded to the demands of labor for increased pay, though at the time the possible profits of manufacture were none too large for a fair return on capital and effort. This was done rather than to have a strike and contention. It was supposed at least that under increased pay the men would labor as faithfully and do as much work per day as before. Strangely enough, more annoyances than ever have since arisen, and in many instances it was found that a systematic arrangement was being carried out to reduce the amount of labor performed. Remonstrance in some of the larger shops with the men, on discovering this fact, only brought out that what they were doing was what they called a day's work. Scarcely any improvement could be induced by most earnest measures. It was thus shown beyond a doubt that the men had arranged to do a much smaller day's work at the increased price, and would do no more. Accumulation of annoyances in many directions, and the outrageous boycott carried on against Charles Harrington & Co., as depicted in the action of the Knights of Labor at Plymouth and elsewhere, had gradually brought us to the one idea in common that our business could never be a success under these conditions. So the manufacturers of leather received the double demand that on such a day we should change the hours of work and pay for splitting such prices, and conduct our splitting in just such a manner as they prescribed or or they would strike our shops, the limit of human endurance had been reached. The spirit and rights of American citizens to have something to say as to the carring on of their own business was going to assert itself. And is has, as seen.

In the matter of the hours of labor, the peculiar condition of most of the tanneries is such, owing to absence of means of illumination that for several months in the year only from eight to nine hours of work can be done per day.

In the summer commencing at 6, with a short stop for lunch, ten and a half hours is secured. This custom has arisen from the conditions existing very naturally, and whatever time thus made has been called and paid for as a day's work. Had the men in our several factories come to us individual employers and requested a change to fifty-nine hours per week, we do not believe there is one who would not readily have acquiesced. But to have an edict issued directing our action to such on and after July 12, is not our idea of what is fair, right or American. It was a dictation to be resisted on principle.

Accompanying, and as before stated as a part of this difficulty, was the splitting demand, not request, complaint or statement of what they thought ought to be but a printed dictation of what should be on and after July 12, the same day the time dictation was to take effect. This dictation of the splitters carried out, if it were possible, would entirely change our business methods at a considerable increased and totally unnecessary expense. They demanded such separations into various measurement of the sides, and various weights of the splits, as would be impossible to make, with any reasonable economy. Beyond all this their edict said you shall have no apprentices for one year. Many of our men were hired to split by the day. They say these men should do nothing else, "no choring or dampening." We could practice no economy by having less skilled help split out the heads, which are of less value and account but each "journeyman shall split his own heads." Also they say no men shall be hired by the day to save the totally unnecessary separations, for "day work must be based on these prices.

Dictation like this amounts to business destruction. We believe that, as our pay and that of our men for the joint labor performed, can only come from successful business the men are striking at their own well being as well as ours. In some way for mutual good it must come about that our men shall understand something of the difficulties under which we labor, and see as a truth the impossibility of conducting our business successfully under the conditions which they attempt to impose. The principles they now desire to enforce we cannot do business under. It thus follows that the course we adopted became virtually necessary.

Mr. and Mrs. Chase returned to their position in the South Church choir last Sunday. Mr. Harper of Charlestown sang tenor.

Mr. Andrew Fitz, of Salem, is still singing at the Unitarian church, and is giving good satisfaction.

Miss Grace F. Dalton, of the Unitarian choir, supplied for Miss. S. P. Clemens, at the South church, Salem, Sunday morning. She did not sing at St. John's Church as announced.

It has become the fashion, if we may so denominate it, among the organists in town, to play only a few chords, and sometimes the first and last lines of a hymn tune, before it is sung by the choir. Whether it originated from a desire to save time, or hasten the service, we are unable to say. It is a pleasure to see a return to the old time method of giving out a hymn tune in full, clearly and intelligently, on the part of Miss E. Dora Clark, the present organist of the Unitarian Church. The people of the church and congregation are much pleased with Miss Clark as an organist, an indication which we are glad to note.

Geo. M. Whipple, of the Essex Institute in Salem, and director of the Tabernacle Church Choir, is occupying a cottage at the Willows.

The Salem Cadet Band went into camp in South Framingham with the Eighth Regiment. It is worthy of record that this Band have not missed a camp since the organization of the Band.

The music by the Salem Cadet Band last Sabbath at the Willows was one of the best yet given. It included the Overture to William Tell, a cornet solo "The Lost Chord" by Mr. Quinn, and an arrangement "Bric a brac" by Mr. Missud of some selections of a higher class of music than is usually arranged in a medley of tunes. The arrangement is very popular over the country, and Mr. Missud is having a large sale for it.

It is understood that Mrs. George Upton comtemplates a tour to Europe shortly.

The Ladies' Schumann Quartette have issued a neat circular, consisting of two cards tied by a cord, of their organization the coming season. The quartette has been re-organized, and has some good press notices.

The Oxford Male Quartette will not be out of the field this season, as had been announced, although Mr. Saxon, its late manager, will not be connected with it. It consists of T. H. Norris first tenor, G. W. Walton, second tenor, William L. Vinal, baritone and Wm. J. McLaughlin, basso. The first and last named are the old members and Mr. Vinal is manager of it.

The working musical force of Boston has met with two severe losses in the death of Mr. E. M. Bagley, long our best solo trumpeter, and Mr. J. G. Lennon, whose taste and knowledge were by no means limited to Catholic music.

The engagement is announced from Salem of Miss Mary S. Tuckerman, daughter of Dr. J. F. Tuckerman late of Grace Church, Salem, to Mr. William P. Parker.

The Musical Herald for July has among other interesting reading matter an illustrated article on Chinese Music and Musical Instruments, and, for music a Nocturne by Robert Schumann; "Bright Stars of Heaven" by Reinberger, words by Ellis Gray; and a bass solo, "O Source of Uncreated Light," by Sumner Salter. This monthly is published in Boston, at $1 a year or 10 cents a number.

It is said that John J. Braham will direct the orchestra at the Globe Theatre next season. Mr. Mullaly has accepted an engagement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A new Swedish soprano, now en route to this country, will make her first appearance at the Worcester Musical Festival. It is expected that she will make a great success. We shall give shortly, a list of the solo artists to appear at the coming Festival.

The following programme will be rendered at the Willows by the Salem Cadet Band, Sunday, July 25th:

Residents along the shores of our large ponds complain that boys bathe in them. Well, let the boys bathe. People are not obliged to look at the boys, are they?

It is reported that a new weekly paper, published in the interests of the Knights of Labor, will shortly be started in this vicinity, to be called Workingmen's Sentinel.

The shop that seems to be doing the most business in this town is George P Osborne's. He is employing 18 men and it is said none of them belong to the Knights of Labor.

Mr John Fallon of Lawrence, father of Mr J Howard Fallon, has been chosen vice chairman of the state board of lunacy and charity. Chairman Donnelly is absent in Europe.

Mr. Schleiber of the executive board of district 77, was in town last week visiting the morocco men and looking after delinquents in the order who were behind in their assessments.

Give your animals plenty of water these hot days. Dogs should not be fed too much meat; a meal of cooked mush is much better for them, but give them all the water they want.

John P. Peabody will have a grand closing out sale next week. There will be no boys play about this sale, but Mr. Peabody means business, and it will pay our readers to take due notice.

Doctor C S Wright, the dentist, has leased the rooms in the Thomas block, directly over the new post office. There will be three rooms in the suite which will be furnished with all modern conveniences.

Several heavy showers passed over Peabody Monday night and Tuesday morning. The streets were washed badly in some places but no serious damage was done. It was welcomed by the farmers.

Patrick Hefferen, the oldest man in this town, died at his home on Fulton street last Wednesday evening at the advanced age of 93 years. He was for a number of years employed in the street department.

A very fashionable flower is the hollyhock and there are a number of beautiful beds in this town, notably at C. B. Farley's, Mrs. Hazen Ayers, and by far the largest and finest at Mr. William Harrington's.

Camp meeting at Asbury grove, Hamilton, will open Wednesday, Aug 17th, and close on the 24th, and the present indications are that there will be a larger attendance from this town the present year than for many seasons past.

We call the attention of our readers to the dental card of Drs. Kimball & Howard, 57 Union street, Lynn. These gentlemen make a specialty of the new vapor gas, and make no extra charge for its use when more than one tooth is extracted.

Comer's Commercial College, 666 Washington Street, Boston, whose advertisement will be found elsewhere, is the leading institution for business education in New England. The 46th annual catalogue will be sent to any address, if applied for, free of charge.

At the fortieth anniversary of the Swampscott Congregational church last Thursday Mr Chas A Haskell responded in his usual pleasant manner to the following toast:

Our Superintendents.—They have gone even beyond our pastor. Scripture says, "If a man desireth office of a bishop, he desireth a good work." It being our superintendents they have desired a good deal of work.

Mr. Weston Lewis, one of the newly appointed members of the Arbitration Commission appointed by Gov. Robinson, says: "I do not see how it would be discourteous, or putting ourselves forward, should we informally visit such localities as Peabody, where the tanners are at present involved, and learn what we could of the situation. The constitution of this board means something or it does not. If the passage of the act was merely a vote-catching device the commission better never exist. But it seems to me that it opens a wide field for work, and I mean to test the situation thoroughly."

Where Hours go Merrily.

About 250 attended the picnic of the South Society at Centennial grove last Thursday and the usual sports and pastimes were enjoyed, and everything passed pleasantly. The Salem Brass Band furnished music.

A pleasant party was present at a surprise party of Miss Genie Dodge at her father's house on Warren stree last evening. The time was passe with games and music and a bountifu collation was served.

The union picnic of the Knights Labor was held at Canobie Lake, la Thursday, and was attended by over 800 people from this town and several hundred from Lowell and Lawrence Previous to their departure the Salem Brass Band gave a concert on the square. Over $200 will probably be the amount made on the enterprise. Great interest centered in the list of sports for which prizes were offered. The following is the result: The base ball game between two nines known as the Clippers and Resolutes was won by the former, in four innings, by a score of 6 to 3. The Resolutes played five innings. The prizes for this were a set of nine silver medals. In the three standing jump match, John J. Cahill jumped 36 feet, winning the first prize of $3 and M. Gleason took second prize of $2 on a jump of 34 feet. One hundred-yard dash, for members only, J. Barry and J. J. A Night's Lesson

Kitty had been to the charity ball; and the charity ball was very fashionable; there was no doubt about that. Kitty had eaten a late supper, returned home, gone to bed and to sleep; there was no more doubt about that. She recollected distinctly throwing one shoe under the bed and the other into a corner, saying good night to her own figure in the looking-glass, twisting the figure of a butterfly till her fingers ached before she discovered that it was not the gas-stopper; and then laughing sleepily at all her mistakes. She even remembered the first dream of her sleep, which was something about charity diamonds, chicken-salad lancers, and ice-cream waltzes.

No; there was no doubt that she had gone all through this; yet there she was, staring in at the window of the great ball-room, and the ball was but just commencing. Could she have gone to sleep on the window-sill in some mysterious manner? No; she was outside, and standing in the open air with somebody holding her hand!

Oh, dear! thought Kitty, mournfully; I must have drunk some wine somehow. How strange it is! I wonder how I came here? But what a cold hand holds mine; it is not papa's for it makes me shiver. He must be horrid. I won't look at him. So!

There did not seem to be much need of the resolve, however; for the person who held her hand did not move nor seem to care whether she saw him or not, but quietly looked in with her. So, at last, like most girls, Kitty's curiosity got the better of her, and she glanced out of the corners of her eyes.

Beside her she saw an old man. His beard and hair were long and white, and drooped about his neck and shoulders like falling snow. Upon his head was lightly placed a crown, as of frost work, so delicate was its texture. Robes long and dark, and cold to look at, fell in broad folds from his shoulders and were held to his waist by a girdle of twinkling stars. He was gazing in at the brilliant assemblage with a sad, melancholy look upon his face.

Kitty looked at his robes. How very old-fashioned! she thought; and aged, very aged!

Yes, murmured the old man, old, very old.

Kitty started. He read her thoughts evidently. She was sorry now she had thought it, he looked so sad.

Who are you? asked Kitty, timidly, and why have you brought me here?

I am the Cold Night, said the old man, slowly turning his eyes toward her. His eyes were sharp and piercing, yet full of kindliness. And I have brought you here that you might see how great your charity is, for I heard this was a charity ball.

Yes, said Kitty, nervously.

I am a friend of the poor, continued the Cold Night; and I love to see charity. He looked back into the ball-room as he spoke. You see all your friends here?

Yes, said Kitty, brightening up and gazing inside with something of a proud look.

There's Florry Hall right before the window now. She has those beautiful solitaire diamonds in her ears. I wish I had them.

But you had the handsomest dress, said the Cold Night, sadly.

Oh, yes, exclaimed Kitty, quickly. It was of the richest silk, and cost several hundred dollars. Papa was so kind.

And was it bought for charity? asked the Cold Night.

Why, no, answered Kitty, in surprise, for me, of course.

But the ball is for charity?

Kitty began to be bewildered by so much catechizing; and she was much relieved when he led her away.

They descended to the grand entrance, where he pointed out two little beggars, a boy and a girl who fiddled and sang, and asked a penny of the rich people descending from the carriages.

You passed them by to-night.

Yes, said Kitty; but they were horrid beggars. The Cold Night was silent, and Kitty thought she might have said something wrong; so she added: and common street fiddlers. But the Cold Night said nothing.

They both watched the little duo, Tosey and Tibby, the Cold Night said, and drew nearer to hear what they would say. People, rich with money and great in charity, carefully passed them by, for they were ragged beggars and fiddled and sang. It was cold, very cold; and Tosey played very, very slowly, while the breath of Tibby's quivering plaint disappeared despairingly in the frosty air. The wheels of the carriages seemed to creak in sympathy, as they crushed down the snow. Yes, it was cold indeed, yet they fiddled and sang untiringly, while the rich people alighted and passed up the grand entrance, after glancing contemptuously at the poor little duo, who fiddled and sang as the brilliant dresses disappeared in the distant doorway, but finally stopped as the last carriage drove away.

I suppose we looks too awful, said Tosey, wetting his lips, and feeling vacantly in the small pocket, which, God knows, had not seen so much as a dime for many a day. Yes, said Tibby, but I does feel so hungry, and I sang so loud, and I tried so hard, and— Tibby slightly sobbed, and silently used a small piece of her shawl to wipe away a large tear.

Don't cry, said Tosey, tremulously; let's move on, and perhaps we'll find a little somethin'. Oh, if we only had a few pennies! Tosey took Tibby's hand, and they started to move away.

Oh, Mr. Cold Night, exclaimed Kitty, sorrowfully; let me give them something, poor little things.

But they are beggars, answered the Cold Night.

Kitty looked ashamed. She could feel herself blush, even though she was cold and shivering. The Cold Night handed her a silver piece.

Yes said he; drop it, even if it is wasted. See what they will do.

Kitty took it quickly, and dropped it before them. Right at Tibby's foot fell the money, which she would have passed unnoticed if Tosey had not exclaimed:

O Tibby, there's a dime! and picked it up.

Tibby clapped her hands in delight, danced up and down, and then looked into his hand, to see if it was really there. It was surely.

Won't we have a hot potatoe, though! said Tosey.

And a big roll, and butter, and some meat; and just a very little piece of pie. Tibby named each one on the ends of her fingers, but stopped when she got to her thumb; for the money was all gone by that time, and the thumb was quite large.

But how did it come there? asked Tosey.

Could it have growed? suggested Tibby.

No, said Tosey.

Or fell from the sky?

Guess not, said Tosey, dubiously.

Or been flunged?

Oh, no, Tosey answered emphatically.

They both looked hungrily at the piece of money, and began to count together what lots of things they could buy; and their faces grew bright indeed as they thought of it.

From the shade of the opposite side of the entrance, a thin bundle of rags slowly crept, and unsteadily shuffled up to them. Out of the dirt and rags peered a thin face and glistening eyes, and the hands of the small bundle wearily rubbed themselves together, to try and stir up the blood which was not there.

This is a charity ball, said the thin bundle. Those folks dances for the poor. The glistening eyes looked eagerly at Tosey and Tibby, and frequently glanced at the money in their hands. We is poor, and they dances for us, and for my mother who is sick abed; they dances to give us the bread which we seldom has.

Tosey looked in surprise at the thin bundle, rubbing and rubbing its hands.

And does they dress in fine closes for us, and ride in carriages, and give lots of money and all for us?

The thin bundle rubbed faster and faster.

Yes if there's any more than as pays for the dancing and dressin'; and the dancin' costs ten dollars apiece, and the dressin'— oh, I dunno! It's all for us,—if there's any left.

But they didn't give us any when I sang, said Tibby.

Lors, no! said the thin bundle; they think beggars don't need nothin'. They has folks as hunts up poor folks when they has time, and sews flannels when they hasn't. Yes, they says they does all this for us, but—the bundle shook its head as if it were doubtful, and continued:

I stood over yonder, thinkin' somebody would give me somethin'; but they all looked mad at me, and I went back inter the shadder and watched 'em. It was a big sight, but I'm just as hungry. The hands stopped rubbing, and the eyes looked wet as the bundle added: my mother is very, very sick. Oh, we's so poor—so poor!

Tosey looked at his little sister as the rags began to shuffle away.

Tibby, said he, does we feel so auful hungry?

Tibby hesitated. She looked at the silver, and then at the slowly retreating figure, and then she looked up into Tosey's loving face.

No, Tosey, I dunno as I does.

Tosey turned around, and running after the departing figure, handed her the piece of money.

There! said he, take it; you need it more than we does.

The bundle looked in surprise as she took the piece, and tears fell down the cheeks of the thin, pale face. But she only said: I'm very, very grateful, and walked off.

The two little musicians watched the figure as it disappeared in the darkness, while the happy shuffle of the feet grew fainter and fainter. Ah, here was charity, godlike charity, in the hearts of the beings that the rich despised and thrus from their door.

As the Cold Night turned toward Kitty, he found her silently wiping her eyes.

Do you see what true charity is? he asked, in a sweet, sympathetic voice.

Yes, yes, murmured Kitty; I see, I see.

While they were talking, they had slowly risen up, up to the brilliant windows again.

Now look at the mockery, said the Cold Night, somewhat harshly.

It was the most brilliant hour of the ball. Lights from myriads of jets, imbedded in crystal chandeliers, sparkled with jewels, and silks and laces were gathered in merry groups, or joining in pleasurable dance to the strains of sweet and lively music. It was a beautiful sight indeed; but somehow the people looked heartless to Kitty, and jewels glittered spitefully, while the rich silks seemed to hiss and hiss as they rustled along, as if all were rebelling against their false use.

But one more act, said the Cold Night gently leading her down, down, to the opposite side of the street.

From a dark corner, with their arms twined about each other's necks, the two little beggars watched the windows of the brilliantly lighted hall—away up in the sky it seemed,—watched the gay figures that frequently appeared in rich dainty dresses, and smiled to think it was all for the poor and needy.

They dances for us and for others, murmured Tibby; for those as is in want. Maybe the beautiful ladies will find us here to-morrow, and give us some bread.

Yes, said Tosey; and the poor little girl as has the sick mother. P'haps they'll find them, and help them, too.

The Cold Night waved his hand above them, and they both shivered, and said how cold it was. Tosey tried to play a note on the violin, but the strings creaked so dismally that he laid it aside. Then they sang together the sweet little song of charity Tibby had sung to the rich people; and as they sung the Cold Night spread his mantle slowly around them till they were fast asleep.

Oh sir, cried Kitty, spare them and let them live!

No, said the Cold Night; they are too poor to live. They must die.

Kitty fell on her knees before him. O sir! she pleaded beseechingly, I am rich and will take care of them, and relieve them from suffering.

But the Cold Night raised his hand and pointed upward, saying:—

Too late, too late!

As he spoke, he took the beggars in his arms and slowly rose up towards the stars, leaving Kitty sobbing upon the ground. And as she knelt there, she heard, high in the skies, the song that the beggars sang, the song of sweet charity, swelling to a mighty chorus, as one would think to celebrate a mighty deed—mighty in the sight of heaven. She tried to raise her head, but could not; she seemed bound to the earth by a great weight, as of gold; while above the song grew fainter and fainter till, at last it ceased and she fell into a deep swoon.

* * * * *

It was broad daylight when Kitty awoke, and the sun was shining brightly into her window. In the hall the maid was humming a subdued song as she went blithely about her work; while without, the white smoke of morning fires—signs of stirring life—curled upward from the chimney tops into the cool air, as if glad to meet the light of day.

It was only a dream, yet oh, how vivid, thought Kitty, as she rubbed her eyes again and again surprised to see the walls of her own pretty room actually around her.

Only a dream, yet how full of truth! cheerily rang the milkman's bell as Kitty donned her morning dress; and as she passed down the broad staircase, the great hall clock seemed to say—

Only a dream, only a dream; yet there's a lesson; and Kitty pondered.

A year from that time Kitty passed by the same old clock; but this time it said, as it ticked, ticked away:—

Only a dream; yet it's made her an angel—angel of mercy to suffering need. Her name, so dear to us, is a name of love among the poor. Ah, happy was the day when to her eyes, a dream revealed true charity:

Kilima-Njaro, the recently discovered monarch of African Mountains, is the subject of the opening paper in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for August. It is finely illustrated. An article on Turner, the great English painter, is accompanied by his portrait, and reproductions of some of his famous works, including the famous Slave Ship. Mr. Thomas Powell begins Leaves from my Life, with anecdotes and personal conversation about and with Charles Lamb and Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Musical readers will be interested in the picture of the new organ in the Cathedral at Riga, Russia, the largest in the world, and the very full description accompanying it. There are portraits of Dr. Dio Lewis, Archbishop Knox, the new Primate of Ireland, the late Rabbi Isidor Kalisch, and the four new Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. There are many beautiful pictures, and the usual complement of short articles and poems.

This is not the weather for heavy or very serious reading, but Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly adapts itself to all seasons. The August number gives a most attractive sketch by George Makepeace Towle of The Nestor of Europe, the Emperor William of Germany. If that is not light enough, Daudet's sketch of Tartarin in the Alps, and stories like Towner's Hermon Drake's Ashes and a Scrap of paper will certainly tempt readers. Croffut, the lively lecturer and newspaper writer, tells of the four Fields, not in the country, but of the country, Cyrus W., David D., Stephen J., and Henry M. Field. A Ship-Portage from Sea to Sea is an able discussion of the merits of the proposed ship railway at Tehuantepec. F. C. Valentine tells of Central American Women, and Professor Eaton discusses the important subject, Fresh and Foul Air.

Hay Fever Sufferers.—The berumns of people annually afflicted with this most annoying malady seems to be greatly on the increase. * The editor of this journal is an annual victim, and, with a view to discover a specific cure, has tried numerous remedies. Of these Ely's cream Balm is by all odds the quickest and most satisfactory, two applications greatly allaying the usual symptoms in the nose and eyes. We would recommend its use by all subject to hay fever, and we gladly bear unsolicited testimony to it its efficacy in our own case. —Media, Pa., Record.

SCARECROWS IN VERMONT.

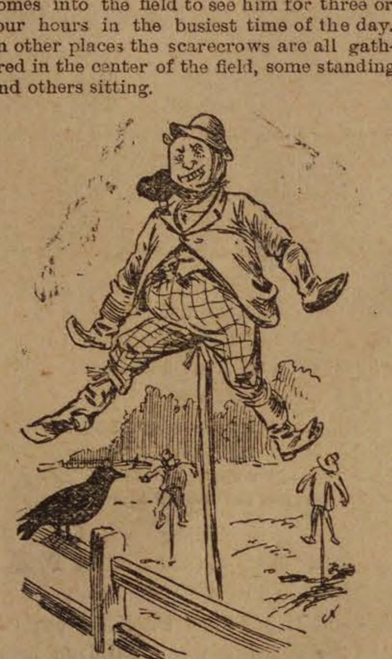
Only Crows Go Near Them—A Well Developed Branch of Art.

The progress of art has been very rapid in Vermont for a year or two, and this season the state exhibits the largest, most varied and ruggedest army of scarecrows that was ever seen out of doors. There is nothing on his farm that a Vermont farmer takes so much pride in as his scarecrows, and he sits up late at night during the winter and early spring devising new forms of scarecrows and novel expressions to be painted in red chalk on their lantern jaws.

There is a mistaken popular notion that the primary purpose of a scarecrow is to scare crows, but it is not so in Vermont. The Vermont farmer loves art purely for art's sake, and his scarecrows embody and express his highest conceptions of the good, the true, and the beautiful. If his scarecrows happen to scare crows or a locomotive off the railroad track, that sort of work is supplementary and merely incidental, like spoils in a political campaign.

In other states one scarecrow for each half acre of growing corn is deemed to be enough, but in this state a farmer who planted a scarecrow out in a field alone would be boycotted by his neighbors. The Vermont man not only is willing that his scarecrows shall dress better than himself, but he recognizes that the social instinct is stronger in them; so he never sets out less than three to seven scarecrows on each half acre of ground.

He takes pride also in giving them picturesque poses. Sometimes they are seen lolling in a group of three or four under a shady apple tree, where they will not get sunburned; often they are set up in graceful posture on a stone wall, with their knees half up to the chin, their hats cocked over their eyes, and with arms dangling over their legs, just as the farmer fixes himself when a neighbor comes into the field to see him for three or four hours in the busiest time of the day. In other places the scarecrows are all gathered in the center of the field, some standing and others sitting.



Masterpieces of art.

These open-lot scarecrows are masterpieces of art, and only the most experienced scarecrow sculptors dare set their figures out where everybody can look at them. Not only do they dress well, but their members are skilfully articulated, so that they can toss and fling their arms about in the wild wind from the mountains. Many persons traveling on the railroads past a group of articulated scarecrows when the wind was high have been deluded into supposing that it was a gathering of local Vermont politicians.

The Vermont scarecrow is the best dressed in the world. After he gets through with a suit of clothes, the farmer takes them for himself. Usually he wears a plug hat, and many of them carry an umbrella to keep off the rain and sun. He also is the happiest still-life figure in the world. He never looks for company. When the farmer is not with him looking out for his comfort, introducing a little more straw into his bowels, splintering his arms so that they will thrash the air in a more spirited and artistic style, or driving his spinal column a little more deeply and firmly into the soil, the crows always come down from the hills to cheer him up. They perch themselves on his plug hat, crane their heads under the brim into his earnest, thoughtful face, and then look at each other and grin and cackle. Were it not for the scarecrows the life of a Vermont crow would be dull and dismal. As it is, they have a gay, rollicking time with the scarecrows all summer, but when the November storms have knocked the scarecrow into his cocked hat and flung him about the field, they sail silently and disconsolately away to the south.

A crow evinces a good deal of emotion when his scarecrow friend flops down on the ground. As an artisan in the scarecrow-making business of White River Junction said a few days ago: "Crows can't seem to jest make out what the dumb things be, an' knowin' a crow as well as I do, and what cur'us inquisitive cusses they be, it's my opinion that they'll hang around the state o' Vermont till they find out. Of course I make a good many scarecrows each year, an' some of 'em is corkers fur style an' gineral make-up, but I don't mind tellin' you that in my opinion Vermont will be chock full o' crows jist so long as we continner ter twine a string o' scarecrows round ther hull state each spring ter 'tract 'em. I don't say I'm opposed ter scarecrows. 'Twouldn't do in the state of Vermaount. 'Taint popular. You might as well kick agin the Congregation'l church in Massachusetts—but I do say damacrow." There are many scarecrows that look very serious and very much in earnest, and some there are also that frown at you, but it does not seem to be positive malevolence that ails them, but the unhygienic way in which they are set up. A scarecrow cannot smile and look joyous with a ten-inch rip in his abdomen, or with his head dangling by a rope down his back into the top of his rubber boot. All properly constituted and normally healthy Vermont scarecrows have a not repulsive look; indeed, most of them, big and little, slender and corpulent, have a positively jaunty and social air. Vermont scarecrows are rather noted for their good nature, even when they look their worst.—New York Sun.

Obeying Orders.

"Patrick Mulcahey, you are charged with resisting an officer of the law."

"Yis, sor; faith I did, sor; but it wuz all along o' you, sor; for the last toime Oi wuz here didn't yez say: 'Patrick, phwat brought yez here?' and I sez: 'The p'laceman, bad cess to him,' an' thin sez you: 'Foive dollars an' costs; an' see that he don't do it agin;' an' begorra Oi thried not to lit him, but the ould baste would have me whither or no."—Chicago Rambler.

Purple Won't Take Over Red.

Miss Cleveland asks: "Why should not Chicago, the Venice of your western Adriatic, array herself in 'Tyrian purple' and become renowned as the home of muses more vigorous than those of Greece?" It is a hard question to answer at first sight. It seems probable, however, that the town of Chicago has been painted red too often to take kindly to the "Tyrian purple."—New York World.

Gents. Furnishing Company.

We are requested to print the following circular, issued by the Arkansaw Male Furnishing company:

"Attention, young ladies and widows: There are several associations throughout this country and England which furnish wives, but until we began business in this state no company has proposed to furnish husbands. We have just succeeded in obtaining several hundred respectable young men, who are willing to be matrimonially disposed of; so, upon receipt of twenty-five cents in stamps, we will forward photographs of subject, together with locks of hair. Below you will find several testimonials:

Arkansaw Male Furnishing Co.—Gentlemen: For many years I was an old maid. I tried many remedies for procuring a sure and permanent husband, but failed. By chance I heard of your institution, and I must say that the husband which you have furnished me is satisfactory. I congratulate you upon the great good you are accomplishing. Yours,

MRS. MARY SATTLETON.

Mrs. Peter Fluker, of Mill Bayou, writes as follows:

"I am perfectly delighted with the husband you sent me. He arrived six weeks ago and I have not regretted applying to you. He is out now chopping wood. Yesterday morning he cooked breakfast while I was doing up my hair. I would not take anything for him."

The following, from Mrs. Martha Whickle, comes unsolicited:

"Gentlemen: For ten years I was a widow, my husband having been killed by a wild hog. Not very long after his death gentlemen began to pay attentions to me, but somehow I was not successful. I sued one of them for breach of promise but I only succeeded in getting a cow in the decline of life and a horse that wouldn't pull a corn cob stopper out of a jug. Finally a friend showed me your advertisement. At first I paid no attention to it, having seen so many swindles, but thinking perhaps there might be some truth in it I sent for full particulars, and must say that I am delighted with the result. The husband which you were so kind as to forward me is somewhat younger than I am, but he is very handsome, and, above all, my first husband's clothes fit him. He milks the cow, churns and only possesses a moderate appetite. I have made him change his religion to fit mine. If you do desire you may make use of these facts. If my husband should die I expect you to furnish me another one at half price."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Matrimonial Philosophy.

We have had some birthdays recently, for Mrs. Arp and I are both June bugs. That is to say, I am a bug and she is a butterfly, I reckon. I won't call her a bug, though she does june around sometimes when things go wrong. She had a birthday last week, and I would tell how old she is if I was sure she would never be a widow. She thinks I would marry again at the drop of a hat, but declares she wouldn't, and says something about a burned child dreading the fire. But she doesn't mean that, I know, and the honest reason is that she is afraid she could never find another man like me. It would take her a long time to train another feller and get him up to my standard of uxorial docility. A young man will train, but one over 30 won't train worth a cent, and that is why it is so dangerous for a girl of ambition to marry an old man or a widower. The training is on the other side then, and she had just as well surrender to the inevitable.

We had the birthday, and gathered all the children but one. There were nine of them here, and some grandchildren and some friends, and we had a good time. I saluted Mrs. Arp on her cheek soon in the morning. She always turns her cheek to me now, but didn't use to, by no means. We had music, and played cards, and went a-fishing, and eat spring chickens and huckleberry pie, and talked, and the boys said smart things and told of exploits and escapes, and their mother and sisters thought they were the smartest boys in the world. If a boy sneezes his mother thinks it smart. Mrs. Arp thinks her boys are an improvement on the old man, but my ambition is for girls to be as smart as their mother. There is no room for improvement on that line. Not long ago I went off and was gone a month. When I came back I had a warm welcome, and everything was calm and serene. I played king and autocrat for two or three days, and strutted around with the same consequential airs I had worn over in Carolina. But they don't last long at my house, and now I am in my normal state of sweet humility.—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

How to Keep Off Cannibals.

Sometimes a good case is ruined by proving too much. This was illustrated the other day in Chicago.

At a meeting of ministers the Rev. Mr. Ayres read a long paper, in which he argued that the coming Christian would not use tobacco. He made many strong points, and impressed his audience. Unfortunately he said in conclusion that even cannibals had sense enough not to eat tobacconized flesh. They never devoured smokers and chewers.

When this climax was reached a smile rippled over the upturned faces of the ministers. Finally one of the brethren took the matter up. He said that he had been in doubt until he heard the story about the cannibals. If it was a man's duty in times of peace to prepare for war, it was just as much his duty to guard himself against cannibals. The exigencies of missionary work or business might at any time require a man to visit Africa or Patagonia. He would run the risk of falling in with cannibals. If the tobacco habit would save him from being eaten, it might also save his life. Perhaps the savages would not think it worth while to kill a man who was worthless as an article of food. As a matter of precaution, therefore, he thought it would be wise to stick to tobacco.

The meeting broke up in hilarious disorder. Brother Ayers walked off by himself. The others remained behind to light their cigars. They were resolved to lose no time in heading off the cannibals.—Atlanta Constitution.

Better Left Unsaid.

Mrs. De Hobson Clarke (who flatters herself upon her youthful appearance)—You would scarcely think, Mr. Dumley, that the stalwart young fellow near the piano is my son, would you?

Dumley (gallantly)—No, indeed, Mrs. Clarke; it seems absolutely impossible. Ah—er—is he your eldest son?—Harper's Bazar.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The choirs of three churches in town will have a vacation during the next month. The South church does not close, and the choir at St. John's Church will be present. Mr. Clark, the organist, is expected to take a vacation, and during his absence Miss Katie F. Linehan will preside at the organ. Miss Linehan is also a member of the choir, and a promising musician.

During the vacation the new organ will be put in at the Unitarian church. It will be one of the finest in the vicinity.

The beautiful trio "Hear our prayer," by Abbott, was well rendered last Sabbath by Mr. and Mrs. Chase and Miss Bill, of the South church. It is years since we have been fortunate enough to be present at its rendering in a church service.

The term "chestnuts" can be very appropriately applied to the anthems rendered by many of the choirs in this town. They remind us of the barrel of sermons of the minister, who after reaching the bottom turned the barrel over, only in this case the barrel is terribly small. The fact is, too little time is taken for rehearsal by choirs now-a-days. Often there is no rehearsal at all. And what can be expected? This is well enough in volunteer choirs. But where singers are paid for their services, there is no excuse, save in the dilatoriness of the music committee, for the choirs using the same pieces Sunday after Sunday, with so little variation that a stranger visiting our churches at an interval of a few weeks may listen to the same anthem and response at each time. We want to see a better class of music, and a better rendering of that music, in all our choirs. In this as in all other things there should be an aim at improvement.

Those of our readers who remember the singing of Miss Marguerite Hall at the Schubert club concert in Salem, last season, as well as at the Barton Square church and the Unitarian church here, will be pleased to read the following notice from the Birmingham (Eng.) Weekly Post. Miss Hall has been in London several months, going there to take part in society concerts, for which she is eminently fitted: "A charming young vocalist has just descended on our shores from across the Atlantic. Madame Edna Hall, whose success in Boston, U. S., as a teacher is remarkable, has committed her eldest daughter to the tender mercies of the London music-loving public, after an excellent training in the schools of Florence and other Italian cities. She is a sweet, charming, natural girl, with no affectations, and I have frequently heard her sing with the greatest pleasure. I am invited to do so at the house of the celebrated Charles Halle, in company with Madame Albani, when I return to London and its amusements next week. Miss Marguerite Hall, or, as her friends call her, "Daisy," has a highly cultured voice—naturally a rich mezzo-soprano in calibre—and she sings a whole repertoire of Norwegian and Hungarian ditties delightfully in a drawing room, when she is not in concert room humor. I often find that these less pretentious efforts give more real pleasure to the ordinary music lover than such as requires technical knowledge to appreciate."

It is rumored that Mr. Gericke, the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will next spring make a tour of the United States, giving Wagner's "Parsifal" with his orchestra.

The New Music Hall Association elected Directors on Friday evening at Weirs and subsequently the board chose Lucius Tuttle as President, W. R. Brackett as Treasurer and Frank E. Brown as Secretary.—Salem Register.

The attractions of the Boston Cadet Band at the Point of Pines was augmented last Sunday by the splendid cornet playing of Sig. Liberati. There was a large gathering at the Pines, and every selection was received with furore.

The Salem Brass Band have been engaged by the Willows management to play Tuesday afternoons and evenings. There is also to be music in the dining hall of the Pavilion from 1 to 5 on Sundays, and the concerts of the Cadet Band Sunday afternoons from 5 to 7 will continue. The Willows is gaining a wide popularity this year.

If the feet are tender and painful after long standing or walking, great relief may be obtained by bathing them in salt and water. A large handful of salt to a gallon of water as warm as can be borne is the proper proportion. The feet should be immersed and the water thrown over them with the hand and also over the legs as far as the knees. When the water becomes too cool, dry the feet and legs, rubbing with a rough towel upward. Neuralgia of the feet has been cured by perseverance in this method night and morning.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST.—For some time past the question of purity in baking powders has formed quite a feature of newspaper discussions, and eminent doctors of philosophy have given opinions as to the ingredients which compose many of the articles sold under that name. The investigations have narrowed down to the limit which awards the Royal Baking Powder the palm of purity, and several of the most distinguished scientists have testified to their conviction that no extraneous or deleterious matter enters into its composition. The Royal Baking Powder Company have achieved a world-wide reputation for the success which has marked their preparation of cream of tartar for baking purposes. It is indisputably shown that they have eliminated all elements of tartrate of lime, alum or other impurities, and present to the public a healthful and chemically pure article. Such widely known chemists as Henry Morton, E. G. Love, H. A. Mott, William McMutrie and others have verified its superiority over other manufactures, and testified, through practical experience, to its excellence. It is well for families to observe the fact that it costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other, but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the one "absolutely pure" baking powder made.

The August Atlantic is an extremely good one. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett contributes a clever story called The Two Browns, and Octave Thanet has a very amusing sketch about Six Visions of St. Augustine, in which we see the town from six different points of view. The three most notable articles of the number are an entertaining paper on Domestic Economy in the Confederacy by David Dodge; a paper on The Indian Question in Arizona, by Robert K. Evans; and an essay on The Benefits of Superstition by Agnes Repplier. Miss Edith M. Thomas contributes a poem to the memory of Helen Hunt Jackson, and there are also some other verses which are up to the usual high standard of Atlantic poetry. The three serials by Henry James Bishop, and Charles Egbert Craddock (Miss Murfree) are as interesting as ever; and the Contributors' Club, which deserves a word for its brightness, closes the number. JOHN P. FERNALD ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

IN THE days of the Rebellion, when Gen. McClellan was in command, and the armies of the North were participants in that campaign of masterly inactivity before Richmond, the familiar dispatch "All quiet on the Potomac" became a by-word. So much so that it will always be associated with Gen. McClellan in our thoughts of that commander and his connection with the army. It was, however, true. During all those weeks and months, despite the feeling of disgust with which the North read over and over again the familiar lines, it was absolutely the only thing to be said. There was no change. It was truly "All quiet on the Potomac."

It is now the third week of the labor difficulty in Peabody. Since the first announcement of the manner in which the "lockout" or "strike," or whatever it may be called, was precipitated, the familiar lines have rung their changes in the press in this vicinity and elsewhere, "there is no change in the situation." Familiar lines they may be; so much so that they may become as much a by-word as the dispatch from the army of the Potomac. They may even be the object of ridicule. Yet it is absolutely true. There is no material change in the situation.

A large and earnest meeting of the Knights of Labor was held last Friday evening in the Town Hall. Delegates and representatives from other districts of the State, including District 30, the most prosperous in Massachusetts, assured the men here of support and financial aid. The tanners and curriers of Woburn, the sister town of Peabody and Salem in the leather trade, have indicated, by published resolutions, their sympathy with the Knights here, and have promised their alliance in this time of their need. There is no material indication of any change of feeling among the laboring men.

On the other hand, most of the manufacturers, by their own labor and the help of a few who are not in sympathy with the Knights, have been enabled to keep their stock along; wax leather has taken a rise, with a prospect of a still further advance; a shut-down for several months means the probability of lower prices for hides—all of which is for their advantage. So that there seems to be no indication of any change in sentiment among the manufacturers. Both sides are determined, and both sides have many elements of strength. There is no change in the situation.

With the manufacturers rests the responsibility for the present trouble, and we presume they are willing that it should remain there. Whatever may have been the cause of the issuing of the circular which was posted in the shops the night previous to the departure of the men, THAT CIRCULAR was the sole cause of the refusal of the men to any longer continue work. That circular did not refuse the request of the men for fifty-nine hours' labor per week; it did not decline to accept the splitters' price list which was presented by District Assembly 77. It might have done one or both of these things, and thrown the responsibility of a strike, if strike there had been, upon the Knights themselves. But they went further; in common parlance, they took the "bull by the horns," and informed the men in substance that only by a renunciation of their allegiance to the Knights of Labor, could they resume work. Requests for arbitration have been met by a reiteration of this point in their circular, so that we think we state fairly their position when we assert that with them this is the point at issue. They are ready to treat with the men individually, but not with the Knights of Labor as an organization.

The Knights of Labor is one of the forms of labor associations, or trade unions, which has been growing in this country for many years. At present it is absorbing the trade unions; and its growth in this part of the country has been remarkable. But it is an organization of laboring men, for their own protection and benefit. Right or wrong in its policy or aims the laboring men believe in it. They believe in organization, and they have a perfect right to organize, as much so and equally with the manufacturers. It the members of this order choose to renounce their individual rights in dealing with their employers, for the common good, which we understand is their position; if they choose to be governed by a price list, as to their labor, which shall be regulated by an Official Board, independent of themselves; if they choose to receive $7.00 a week from the Order, rather than a larger sum for their labor, and renounce their allegiance to the organization. we may think them unwise, or foolish, or otherwise, but there is no law to say them nay. As we understand their position, they are willing to submit the hours of labor, the splitters' price list, or any prices for labor, to arbitration, and abide by the decision; but they cannot and will not renounce their organization. The manufacturers, on the other hand, make no objection to the hours of labor, and there has been little objection to the prices asked for labor. But they will only treat with the men in their individual capacity. It seems to be a square fight as to whether the Knights of Labor, as an organization, shall exist or not. On this ground, we see no prospect of settlement except by an unconditional surrender on one side or the other.

The Republican party, in its convention last year, and by its Legislative action since, has committed itself to the submission of questions of difficuly between the laborer and the employer to arbitration. It condemns strikes, and all violence towards any man in the pursuit of his legitimate occupation. As a Republican paper, the PRESS advocates and commends these resolutions. We believe there has been hasty action on both sides in the present difficulty. We believe both sides have grievances. We believe it would be better for the men, better for the manufacturers, better for the merchants of the town, better for all, if the shops that are now idle or employing few men could be running, and the men at work. Why not settle the matter by arbitration?

THE DECISION of the Superior Court in Boston, in the case of Bernard P. Verne, the hotel barber of the Tremont House, is of great importance, regarding the enforcement of the Sunday law as at present on the Statute books. It will be remembered that the police commissioners of the city of Boston ordered the shops to be closed on the Lord's day, in conformity with the letter of the law; that Mr. Verne and some others kept open notwithstanding the order; that Mr. Verne was brought before the court and the case was tried last week. The decision of the jury, which was in accordance with the judge's charge, was that Mr. Verne was not guilty of violating the Sunday law, but that the keeping open of his shop was a matter of necessity.

The charge of Judge Barker was explicit, and inasmuch as it is understood to be the opinion of the Full Bench, it is worthy of the careful attention of our readers.

The judge in his charge to the jury said: The charge is generally of keeping open on the Lord's day. The courts have decided that in a complaint of this kind it is a necessary averment that the work performed was not of necessity or charity. Therefore, this is something essential for the government to prove. You have two decisions to pass:—Did he keep open on the Lord's day? There is no contention in this. Second—Did he do work which was not of necessity or charity? Evidence shows that customers came from the street as well as the hotel; that a barber shop is necessary to a hotel's guests; that the arrangement made with the hotel proprietors required him to keep open on Sunday. It may be that you will find that the defendant kept open not only for serving guests, but stray customers. It is fair for you to find that this shop was kept open for the ordinary transactions of the barber's trade. There was no evidence that there was anything in this shop for sale. Whether or not such work is a work of necessity or charity is the question you must decide. If any man is guilty for shaving another, then that person who was shaved would be just as guilty had he shaved himself. If he feels that he must be shaved in order to look better or feel better, then I consider it a necessity, and if he offers himself to a barber, the barber is justified in doing it. On the other hand a barber may do things in his shop which are not of this kind. The object of the Sunday law was to provide for a period of rest in the ordinary vocations and amusements of the community. The law recognizes that in certain cases work must be done. In one case in which it was questioned whether the United States mail could be carried the courts decided that it could be done, but must be done with as little disturbance as possible. Now, if the keeping open of a certain shop shall disturb the serious or attract unusual attention, then one might be liable. But if a man opens his shop merely to do work for others of which they themselves are the judges as to whether it is for health and comfort, then he is not liable.

The charge of the jury leaves it for the barber and his customers to decide whether it is for their health and comfort that his shop shall be open on the Lord's day, and it is probable that the decision in this case will settle forever the liability of a barber to prosecution for what has been considered a violation of the Sunday law.

The necessity for keeping these shops open on the Lord's day, in certain localities—in this town, for instance—is one thing, and the liability to prosecution is another. Because of this decision, and because under this ruling no prosecution could be made, we do not consider it would be wisdom on the part of the barbers of this town to open the shops on the Lord's day. By agreement among themselves, the shops were closed. There has been no fear of prosecution, because there was no need of it. The agreement between each other has been kept. It is just the same as if they had agreed to close their shops on some week day evening or evenings. They get just as much business during the week, and with an exception now and then, everyone is as well served.

People have become accustomed to the closing on Sunday mornings, and in a town like this can get their work done just as easily during the week. No doubt they would have custom if they opened Sunday mornings; if they kept open till midnight every night, they would find some late individual who would stray in. But that does not prove the advisability or necessity of keeping open at such times.

The charge of the judge is so general that it will be considered to have a wider application than the barber shops. It shows that there is a disposition to put a liberal construction on the Sunday law, in accordance with the ideas of the century in which we live, rather than an adherence to the strict letter of the old "blue laws" of our fathers. This judge would doubtless hold that the necessity existed for a man travelling on the Lord's day to sustain his stomach by partaking of food; if he did not wish a full meal, but a lunch, such as a piece of pie, a doughnut, or some fruit, that the necessity was equally great; if he even desired a glass of soda to refresh himself, or if he considered a cigar necessary to his comfort and convenience, this judge would undoubtedly hold that he ought to obtain it. And there should be some place convenient for the traveller to obtain it. Public opinion has sanctioned the opening of restaurants for the serving of meals and the sale of such light lunches, fruit, soda and cigars as are sold in stations of railroads on the Lord's day. There is no doubt that this opinion is in the line of the charge of Judge Barker to the jury in the case of barber Verne.

The liberalization of the Sunday laws in the minds of our people has come to stay. It is too late to stop the running of horse cars on Sunday, or Sunday trains on the steam railways. The resolutions of conclaves at Monday's ministers meetings will not suppress the Sunday papers. They have come to stay. The papers may be improved, the trains run under certain limits, but these things will exist. It is far better to accept the inevitable, take things as they are, and of necessity must be, help each other in the journey of life by charity and forbearance, rather than stand aloof, attempting, like Mrs. Partington, to beat back with a broom the waves of the Atlantic Ocean.

AT THE Town Meeting called for Monday evening, Aug. 2d, a member of the Board of Selectmen is to be chosen in place of Levi Preston. There have been several names suggested to the public, and many more are doubtless in the minds of our readers, against whom, as to their ability or judgment, nothing can be said. But there is a gentleman who was nominated at the citizens' caucus for this office, who failed of election by a few votes, and whose failure has been ever since inexplicable to many persons, to whom the election at the present time in a certain sense rightfully belongs. We refer to CHARLES H. GOULDING.

As we said, Mr. Goulding came within a few votes of election in the spring. He was the choice of the citizens' caucus, and received many votes outside of that ticket, else he would not have been so close to an election. He has conducted a successful business in our midst for many years; and his experience in dealing with the large number of people with whom his line of trade brings him in contact has given him that judgment which is one of the necessary qualifications as a member of that Board. The present Board of Selectmen had sufficient confidence in his judgment and knowledge of men to appoint him as the Republican member of the Board of Registrars, and their appointment has given universal satisfaction to men of all parties.

Mr. Goulding is in no sense a bitter partisan. Having the courage of his convictions, he recognizes the privileges of others who may not agree with [illegible] and he would make a liberal and conscientious member of the Board of Selectmen. His views on the enforcement of the laws are in harmony with the majority of the present Board, and by no vote of his would any change in policy be made regarding the work which all law-abiding citizens of this town have commended.

Mr. Goulding's name has been received with hearty commendation whenever it has been mentioned. He has many friends who, by their vote and influence, will say next Monday night that he should be chosen to fill the vacancy, in the Board. We commend Mr. Goulding willingly to our readers. We know of no reason why he should not be elected. We hope to be able to record his election, and to congratulate the town upon the wisdom of their selection.

STATEMENTS ARE frequently made by the press in this vicinity, who do not know, or do not care to know the facts, regarding the inactivity or inefficiency of the Law and Order League of this town. We had occasion a few weeks since to correct such a statement in the Beverly Times. Such representations are not true. The League of this town is not inactive—it is not inefficient.—The work of the League is and has been so effective that there remains little to do. Sales of liquor, if there are any, are confined almost entirely to tenement houses—the hardest kind of cases to obtain evidence against.

There are no saloons, in the common acceptance of that term, open; nor are there sales made at the hotels. There is no doubt about this. It is not a matter of opinion. Under such a state of affairs it is not surprising that there are fewer seizures, and it would not be strange if there should be a failure to convict on sufficient evidence in the only cases which now remain in town. Such, however, is not the case. We find that of late the proportion of convictions remain, about the same as during the times when seizures were being made almost every day. We have seen a record of the liquor cases before the police court, and we find that while Mr. Crowley tried a larger number of cases than Mr. Farnham the proportion of convictions is slightly in favor of Mr. Farnham.

There has been no diminution in convictions. We make this statement with no wish to reflect upon the faithfulness of Mr. Crowley, but to show that equally with this gentleman has Mr. Farnham been an efficient attorney of the League. And we have reason to know that he is so regarded by the officers of the League and its supporters. The people of this town have found him a consistent, conscientious temperance man, fair and honorable in all his dealings, and a citizen whose character and private life are above reproach.

WHEN LETTERS intended for our citizens are sent by the distributing offices of Salem or Boston to the Asylum Station, it is time the matter was brought to the attention of some one whose duty it ought to be to remedy such carelessness. In our box Monday evening were three such letters, each from a different part of the state, and each was plainly directed. On enquiry we found that they were only a part of an entire bundle which had been sent there. We were also advised that this was not an uncommon occurence. Of course an occasional error of this kind can be readily overlooked, but when it happens frequently, it is a piece of carelessness for which some one should be held responsible. No blame can attach to Mr. Ward in this matter. The error was made either in the Salem or Boston offices. Delays in transporting local mail matter are getting too frequent. It takes a letter from this town longer to reach Marblehead or Danvers than it does to reach New York. If it is the fault of the officials in the large offices, who have become careless, it is time President Cleveland made a change.

ASBURY GROVE.

Life at this attractive summer resort has this year, as formerly, its comfort and to many, solid enjoyment. There have been few changes about the grove since last season; here and there a new cottage is noticed or an old one enlarged. Summer life here is different in a good many particulars from life at the seashore. For instance, the cottages are occupied largely by business men who find for their families a pleasant summer home, situated so conveniently that they can spend their evenings with them and attend to their business during the day. With the ladies things are taken very leisurely; time is of no special consequence; the house work is all attended to in an hour in the morning, and the rest of the day is usually spent out of doors, either in a hammock, or sitting on the piazza with a little light needlework or a novel. The neighbors often gather in groups in the beautiful grove near their cottages, and many pleasant acquaintances are formed which often ripen into strong friendship. There is a letting down of the conventionalities of life. Men are allowed to sit in their shirt sleeves and ladies can sit around in loose wraps without feeling that they are not as well dressed as their neighbors. Many spend a deal of their time in decorating and beautifying their cottages by bits of fancy work and Japanese fans inside, and pretty flower beds outside, which need daily watering, but for which the daily bouquet of fresh blossoms constantly seen on the table on the inside is a reward. By way of change when the sun is sending its perpendicular rays down on the grove, parties are formed and the path through the woods is taken to Idlewood Lake, a beautiful sheet of water where perpetual breezes blow, and selecting a shady nook under the trees, lunch is served and "solid comfort" enjoyed.

The evening brings many pleasures. They are cool enough to call for wraps and spring overcoats, but by no means is the weather uncomfortable. Strolls about the avenue are now in order and parties gather on front piazzas and engage in social converse, making new acquaintances and strengthening old ones. The younger portion of the community meet in different cottages and have a "sing" and on one side is heard the lively music of the college songs, and across the way the old familiar tunes from Gospel Hymns. Ice cream is sold at the restaurants and that has a strong attraction for many. During stormy weather card parties are formed, and progressive whist is played with as much pleasure as in the more comfortable parlors at home. As a whole the people take their enjoyment out of doors and the cottage is only used to eat and sleep in.

The running of the horse cars to the grove is a great treat and they are receiving a liberal patronage from the public. A car connects with each train for Boston, and those who have been here in former years and depended on a crowded barge to convey them back and forth enjoy this luxury. The car is in charge of an experienced young man who acts as driver and conductor. Two pairs of horses are used and the work is divided between them. There is a difference of opinion as to the effect on the future of the grove that the horse cars will have. It certainly is bringing a different element than has ever been here before. It is not unfrequent to see a party of young men and women of loose morals come down and picnic in the woods, and their loud talk and coarse actions disturb, to say the least, the residents near them. Some claim that the horse cars will enable the Christian workers here to extend their work by bringing more people, and that only good results will come by increased attendance at the places of worship. But this is a question that time will settle, and there is no use in borrowing trouble about it.

The present terminus of the horse railroad track is opposite the farm house outside the grounds, and there is no station there, making it quite inconvenient for people to wait in extremely warm or stormy weather. It is reported that the Association will be petitioned to permit the Naumkeag road to to extend their tracks inside the grove and also erect a waiting station near the present site of the "committee rooms." This would be a great convenience but it would make considerable confusion near the "circle," particularly during camp-meeting week. That there should be some shelter for the cars and the public is very apparent, particularly for those who take the first car in the morning, which has stood out all night, and find the seats wet with dew. The Naumkeag road has purchased and fenced in a large lot of land at the top of the hill opposite the "Retreat," and will at once erect their stables and car houses there if they consider them necessary. They are also considering the project of a hotel on the front lot with a stable in the rear. It is a good site for a hotel, and a liberal patronage might be expected. The cottages are rapidly filling up and by next week most of them will be occupied.

The camp meeting season at Old Orchard, Me., opens August 3d, with a conference for the promotion of Christian life and work, and Divine healing, under the leadership of Rev. A B Simpson of New York city. These conferences are characterized by great spiritual and healing power. It will continue ten days. The Boston and Maine railroad will issue tickets at reduced rates. Old Orchard has the most beautiful beach on the Atlantic, and one of the grandest natural amphitheatres for speaking and hearing. It has become a favorite resort with many in this vicinity.

Monday was the 92d birthday of Major Lewis Allen. We wish we could chronicle this year as we have in speaking of this event in former years, that the major was enjoying good health, but that is not the case, as he has been failing for the past year. While his bodily health is poor, his brain is as clear as fifty years ago, when in active business pursuits. The Warren Bank sent him a beautiful bouquet of flowers, and he also had flowers from other parties.

The four-year-old son of Walter C Merrill celebrated his birthday last Monday by a lawn party, at his home at the corner of Foster and Oak streets.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The selectmen have called a special town meeting for Monday evening, Aug. 2, at Town hall, to take action on the following business, viz.

1 To choose a moderator.

2 To choose one member of the Board of Selectmen, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Levi Preston; agreeably to the petition of Stephen F. Blaney and others.

3 To see if the town will enact a code of by-laws for the government of the Trustees of West Peabody cemetery, and empower the present Board to act under it, until their successors shall be chosen at the next annual town meeting, or take any other action concerning the same; agreeably to the petition of W Spaulding and others.

4 To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending the high service water from Aborn street to Maple hill; agreeably to the petition of Timothy O'Keefe and others.

5 To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending the water pipe in Allen's Lane, from its present terminus to the premises of William H Brown, or take any other action concerning the same; agreeably to the petition of A F Clark and others.

6 To see whether the town will appropriate a sufficient sum of money to build and grade a sidewalk on the northerly side of Lynn street, from County street to the residence of David M Newhall; agreeably to the petition of I H Beede and others.

7 To see if the town will accept the provisions of Chapter 274 of the Statutes of 1886, entitled "An Act to provide for Precinct Voting in Towns;" agreeably to the petition of Frank E Farnham and others.

8 To determine what compensation shall be allowed to Forest Firewards and the men they may have occasion to employ under the requirements of Chapter 295 of the Statutes of 1886.

9 To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending the high service water from Liberty street to the premises of Henry Gardner's farm house on Gardner street; agreeably to the petition of Henry Gardner and others.

The school committee have been invited by Mr J W Applebee, special agent for Yaggy's Anatomical study to inspect that work and consider its advantage in our public schools. The study is in the form of a chart and is designed to impress upon the memory of the pupils the exact location of the whole anatomy in a very close manner. It is far ahead of the skeleton and manikin, and is indorsed by the leading educators of the country. Its cost places it within the reach of the committee, and it would be a pleasure for a teacher to give instructions from it.

The Railroad Commissioners have granted the Naumkeag street railroad company permission to increase its capital stock from $70,000 to $250,000. The road was chartered in 1876 to operate the Salem Street Railway. Since then the Naumkeag Railroad Company has bought the Salem road, paying $75,000 for it. The company operates twenty-six miles of road, and owns property to the value of $380,000.

Parties holding keys of fire alarm boxes, who are about to leave town for days or weeks, should leave the key at the next neighbor's and inform the Superintendent. The protection of property requires that the key of each box be kept at the nearest available place, and be obtainable at any and all times.

Powderly says: "No politics in mine!" and his credit will be quoted at higher figures in the market of public estimation than it stood before his announcement. The ground which he takes is just that which the Knights of Labor must make their own if they ever expect to achieve their purpose.

Seventeen dozen rolls were sent to the station from Hathaway's bakery last Thursday morning intended for the Orthodox picnic, but by mistake were put on board the Knights of Labor picnic train and taken to New Hampshire.

The Knights of Labor held a mass meeting at Town hall last Friday evening and none but members of the order were admitted. The meeting was addressed by several prominent labor advocates, and the men were promised support financially from several directions.

According to an expert, the reason why sarsaparilla is so popular in New England is that there is no sarsaparilla in it. Sassafras and checkerberry masquerade as sarsaparilla in beer and soda water and imagination furnishes the medicinal qualities.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

A skittish horse took fright on Franklin street hill last Monday morning and scampered toward the square at a lively rate. The horse turned the corner into Chestnut street on one wheel. He was stopped near the flag-staff.

A man named Buckley, belonging in Salem, was riding a horse on Foster street last Thursday and drove up to read a poster on the old barn at the corner of Lowe street, when the horse shied and crushed his leg against the building, breaking the small bones of the ankle. He retained his position and drove home though suffering great pain.

A horse belonging to John Scott fell while coming out of a ledge last Wednesday and was injured about the breast by a cut three inches long.

A young man chloroformed a kitten last week and flattered himself he had done the job in good shape, but the next morning he was surprised to find the young feline sitting on the door-step.

Mr. Charles Morris was passing along the turnpike road at West Peabody last Sunday, when he discovered a party of young men piling up a lot of straw near the woods. They had set it on fire and as Mr. Morris approached they ran away. He put out the fire before it had gained much headway with his walking stick.

A dog was found by some workmen last Friday lying beside the railroad track near the Jacobs street crossing. The animal had evidently been struck by the cars as he was cut and bruised. He was dispatched by one of the men.

Mr. John Ahearn, who has been suffering a long time with paralysis of one side of the throat, is slowly recovering. The injury was brought on by a fall last April.

There was a lively "knocking out" match on Andover street last Sunday. Both men were well mated, but in a little time one mopped the street with the other. The ill feeling commenced in a saloon several days before. No arrests were made.

Mr. S. B. Winn was in court Friday morning to claim the liquors seized from his driver, Ephraim Provo, but he had mistaken the date and the liquors had been condemned two days before.

Jeremiah Hannon, at work at T. E. Proctor's, was injured about the legs recently by the caving in of a bank under which he was at work.

A swindler has been about town of late and several of his victims have reported to the police. He represented himself as the agent of Mr. A. B. Cross, the photographer, and agreed to furnish one dozen cabinet photographs for $2. He furnished a printed receipt for twenty-five cents which was paid him, and the balance was to be paid when the photographs were completed. The police are looking for him.

As we go to press we hear a report that Geo H West, barber, has left town and that a creditor has received a letter instructing him to dispose of his business. The shop is closed at time of writing, but we know not how much or how little truth there is in the report. —Danvers Mirror. Young West is well known here and learned his trade of "Bobby the barber."

In the police court this morning Timothy McGaey, charged with assaulting his wife, was fined $4.23. She refused to appear against him.

Last Friday afternoon Mrs Enoch Poor, a widow lady living on Central street, was going down a short flight of steps when one of them gave way and she was thrown to the ground. One rib was broken and another fractured.

The police raided the horse car station at "Canada" last evening, but got nothing.

Wiley & Poor have about 3000 sides of dried leather in a store house near Foster street. Last night a team drove up and carried away 300 sides. The matter has been placed in the hands of the police. It is also reported that a quantity was stolen from Messrs. B. A. & N. Jacobs.

Mr William Flannagan is suffering from an accident to his eye. A few days ago he was babbetting a box, when some of the hot babbet flew in his eye, burning it badly. He will have an operation performed.

YOUR HAIR

should be your crowning glory. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the vitality and color of youth to hair that has become thin and faded; and, where the glands are not decayed or absorbed, will cause a new growth on bald heads.

MAY the youthful color and vigor of the hair be preserved to old age? Read the following, from Mrs. G. Norton, Somerville, Mass.: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past 30 years, and, although I am upwards of 60, my hair is as abundant and glossy to-day as when I was 25."

BE assured, that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor will convince you of its powers. Mrs. M. E. Goff, Leadville, Col., writes: "Two years ago, my hair having almost entirely fallen out, I commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. To-day my hair is 29 inches long, fine, strong, and healthy."

RENEWED and strengthened by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair regains its youthful color and vitality. Rev. H. P. Williamson, Davidson College, Mecklenburg Co., N. C., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the last ten years. It is an excellent preservative."

BY the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, Geo. A. Dadman, Waterloo, Mo., had his hair restored to its original healthy condition. He was nearly bald, and very gray. He writes: "Only four bottles of the Vigor were required to restore my hair to its youthful color and quantity."

USING Ayer's Hair Vigor cures diseases of the scalp. F. H. Foster, Princeton, Ind., writes: "I had been troubled for years with a disease of the scalp; my head was covered with dandruff, and the hair dry and harsh. Ayer's Hair Vigor gave me immediate relief, cleansed the scalp, and rendered the hair soft and pliable."

BERDAN AND HIS SHARPSHOOTERS.

Reviewing the Work of the Famous Corps of Riflemen at Gettysburg.

I saw that this was a movement to flank us under cover of the wood, and the enemy was already in front of our extreme left. I therefore determined to attack, violently too, in hopes of throwing the column into confusion and thus to gain time for a change of direction of the corps on our left. I rode back about 100 yards and gave the order: "Follow me; advance firing; double quick, march!" No sooner was the order given than you responded, to a man. At the same time the enemy opened fire upon us. Never were cartridge boxes and pistols emptied quicker or with more effect. We not only doubled up the column but threw it into confusion. The enemy has confessed to have had several hundred killed or wounded by this attack, but the main point gained was the time necessary to put the Third and Fourth corps into position to receive the enemy from the south instead of the west, which saved the army from a violent attack on the flank and perhaps the rear, the result of which would have been very disastrous.

When this had been accomplished I retired what was left of the command, and I regret to say that about one-half were still on the field, killed or wounded. We halted at the rear of the gallant Third corps, when I gave orders for those who were fit for duty to step to the front. Every man stepped forward, some with bandages on their arms, others on their legs or heads, saturated with blood. Then began the old story of reorganization—making captains of sergeants and lieutenants of corporals. I heard one wounded man say to his comrade: "That hill" (referring to the Little Round Top) "is our place." I remarked: "Yes, my man, you are right, and you will be taken there in a few moments." Soon after the men were put in that position the enemy advanced in such great numbers up the gorge from the south, as originally intended by him, that it was difficult to keep supplied with ammunition. So I went around taking cartridges from the boxes of the dead men and giving them to those who were firing. I was taking some cartridges from a man whom I saw fall, when he looked up, recognized me, and said: "Colonel, give me one more shot."

I put the cartridge in the gun, cocked it, and partly held him up while he fired. I was so impressed with the cool courage and determination of the man that I wished to save him for an officer, so I told his comrade to take him to the rear. When he lifted the wounded man up he turned to me and said in an undertone, "This man cannot live." I told him to make the trial, and he carried the wounded man off. In a few moments I came along and gave this second man some cartridges, and in the act of his taking them I recognized him. He did not boast to me of his having returned, but when I spoke to him of it he said, "Yes, he is dead," took the cartridges and went on firing as deliberately as though not only his own life but the whole Union depended upon his special aim with the rifle. In a few minutes he, too, was mortally wounded.—Gen. Berdan's Gettysburg Address.

Serenade of the Spanish Lover.

But on the whole the Spanish student and the serenader was, at the period of my visit, conspicuous by his absence. In Barcelona I heard a great deal of street music of a peculiar kind, but not elsewhere. During my wanderings at night about Cordova I occasionally, but not often, saw the cloaked cavalier before the grated window of his fair one if it was at the first story, or under it if the forbidden chamber were in the second. This scarcity of midnight trysts with a cruel wall between might have been an accident of the season, for if we are to believe the poet, it is not in autumn that a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. There is something depressing about the first chill winds that sweep down from lofty mountain chains upon valleys of the rose and plains of almost eternal summer, and the Spanish lover, though of a somewhat fiery passion, is not above their influence. None of those that I saw paid the slightest attention to the approaching footfall of the stranger, nor did the wearer of the white drapery, seen in a ghostly way in the inner recess of the window, endeavor to withdraw from foreign observation.

In one instance the loving intercourse was carried on under difficulties. The window was far above the wall, but by mounting on a small box and reaching up his arm to its full height the cavalier was able to touch the end of the finger of his charmer, who reached her white arm down as far as possible. To the ordinary observer this would seem a very fatiguing and unsatisfactory style of love-making, but this midnight pair evidently did not tire of it, for having passed the spot before midnight and made an extended tour, I returned by the same place and found the lovers still fondly and painfully touching the tips of each other's fingers.—Cor. San Francisco Chronic Varying Value of Gold Dust.

The value of gold dust was not known to the earlier miners in California. Marshall and those who were with him at the sawmill race had never seen gold in its virgin state before the discovery. The first gold sold at Colona, it is said, only brought $8 an ounce, but it afterward rose to $16, at which figure it remained for some years. Sellers and buyers did not for a long time recognize any difference in the value of different dust. "What are you paying for dust to-day?" was the question often asked by the miners of the dust buyers. Thus, in those times no more difference was recognized in the quality of different gold dust than is to-day recognized in the quality of different sand or sawdust. Buyers mixed their dust together when they sent it to the mint, and paid an average price for it all. This was a very good thing for the miner who had poor dust and very unfair to those who had dust of the best quality.

Afterward it was found that the dust as it was taken from the earth varied greatly in value. Some of it, according to mint returns, was worth even as low as $9 an ounce, and some was worth $20 and more. This is on account of the fact that a greater or less amount of baser metals, silver, copper, etc., is always found in alloy with gold in its natural state. Gold dust always differs as much in appearance as it does in quality. Some of it is yellow and bright, and some is dull in color—dark green and black. The bright yellow dust is not always the best in quality, as might ordinarily be supposed. Some of the purest gold ever mined has been almost black in color. There is also no uniformity in the form of particles of gold dust. Some is fine and flour-like, some is coarse and smoothly worn, and some is rough and scraggly.—San Francisco Post.

He Was Entirely too Argumentative.

"Say, Gregg, I've had my salary raised."

"Stockton, how did you manage it?"

"By argument. He was giving you $30 a week and myself but $20. I convinced him of the injustice, and he's going to pay me $5 more. That was liberal, wasn't it? It equalizes things, you see."

"Yes, Stockton, and that's precisely what I object to. I wish you had been less argumentative. He took $5 a week off my salary in order to add it to yours."—Philadelphia Call.

To restore lost appetite, is the next thing to sea air or an ocean voyage. Druggists sell it.

Happiness

results from that true contentment which indicates perfect health of body and mind. You may possess it, if you will purify and invigorate your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. E. M. Howard, Newport, N. H., writes: "I suffered for years with Scrofulous humors. After using two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I great relief. It has entirely restored me to health." James French, Atchison, Kans., writes: "To all persons suffering from Liver Complaint, I would strongly recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was afflicted with a disease of the liver for nearly two years, when a friend advised me to take this medicine. It gave prompt relief, and has cured me." Mrs. H. M. Kidder, 41 Dwight st., Boston, Mass., writes: "For several years I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my family. I never feel safe, even without it. As a liver medicine and general purifier of the blood, it has no equal." Mrs. A. B. Allen, Winterpock, Va., writes: "My youngest child, two years of age, was taken with Bowel Complaint, which we could not cure. We tried many remedies, but he continued to grow worse, and finally became so reduced in flesh that we could only move him upon a pillow. It was suggested by one of the doctors that Scrofula might be the cause of the trouble. We procured a bottle of and commenced giving it to him. It surely worked wonders, for, in a short time, he was completely cured."

Found

At Home

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

Sold by all Druggists.

Price $1; Six bottles, $5.

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER,

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made. We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bosuley

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated courtesy whether anything i desired or not.

POT-POURRI.

The blue jars in the window,
  The big bowls in the hall,
Hold that sweet old time perfume
  That we Pot-pourri call.
We cannot tell who made it,
  Nor where the flowers did grow,
For those who picked them left us
  Full fifty years ago!

Yet, when at scented evening
  I stand beside the bowl,
And watch my roses fading
  As night mists upward roll,
I seem to see their spirits
  Stand silent there below,
Who made Pot-pourri for us
  Full fifty years ago!

I watch them, youths and maidens,
  About the garden glide;
I see them cull the flowers
  There growing side by side;
I hear their soft love whispers,
  I almost seem to know
The faces dead and buried
  Some fifty years ago!

I smile to think how fleeting
  Are all our joys, our pain;
How swiftly sunshine passes,
  How quickly dries the rain.
For they, too, loved and suffered,
  And bore their own death-blow,
Those pretty lads and lasses
  Dead fifty years ago!

Yet their dead roses whisper
  Of sweetness e'en in death;
This lovely perfumed odor
  Has outlived Love's hot breath;
And sweet can be our evening,
  And, if we wish it so,
Can last e'en like Pot-pourri
  Made fifty years ago!

—All the Year Round.

MRS. GARFIELD AND FAMILY.

They are Living Quietly and Happily at the Old Home in Mentor.

The Garfield home on Prospect street, where Mrs. Garfield has lived since President Garfield's death, is empty and for sale. Mrs. Garfield and her family have gone to live at the Mentor farm, where, she says, she can find more peace and comfort than anywhere else. Before she went there the house on the farm was remodeled and added to. Still, it was much too small for the equipments of the city house, and a few days ago a private sale was held, at which a great many things were disposed of at fabulous prices. During the unsettled period Grandma Garfield went to her old home at Solon, a village twelve miles from town, and near Hiram college, where her boy was taught and taught others. The old lady is pestered almost to sickness by autograph hunters, and will attend to them no more. She is strong and very clear of mind, as of old. Since the removal of Mrs. Garfield to Mentor grandma has rejoined her.

One reason why the house on the farm was enlarged was the need of a room where President Garfield's effects and papers could be placed. These have all been arranged with the utmost care, and placed in systematic order. The articles in the memorial room of the Prospect street house have also been removed to a specially built room in the Mentor home, and a rare collection of tributes from nearly every state in the Union, and from nearly every civilized nation in the world, it is. Mrs. Garfield's father, Mr. Zeff Rudolph, is with her. He and grandma are nearly of the same age—about 83. Harry Garfield is at home. He has just returned from St. Paul's school, near Concord, N. H., where he has been teaching. James R. is studying law with Judges Boynton and Hale, of this city, and is going to make a good, and, perhaps, a great lawyer. He is a close student, and has his father's retentive and legal mind.

Molly is with her mother at Mentor, but often comes to town. She is president of the McAll Mission society, an organization for missionary work in Paris. Mrs. Garfield looks well, but lives very quietly, and retains her garments of black. She gave $50,000 for the Prospect street house, and has only, as yet, been offered $45,000.—Cor. Cleveland Leader.

A Tale of the Eighth Missouri.

"The Eighth Missouri were good fighters," said Theodore R. Davis, as he stopped making the smoke of war with his brush long enough to whiff the smoke of peace out of an attenuated cigarette, "and what they wouldn't steal, except my colors and pipe, was not down in the articles of war. Why, once at Vicksburg they stole a grave. There was really no good place there to bury a body, except on the levee, and the ground there was so hard that the grave diggers had a tough time of it. Well, it happened one day that one of the Eighth died a natural death, and while the boys were wondering what they should with him a detail from an Ohio regiment filed out to dig a grave for one of their number that had passed over. The Eighth looked on to some purpose and when the Ohio boys came out next day with their dead they found the grave filled up and a cracker box lid at the head with 'Sacred to the memory of —— of the Eighth Mo.' But they were good fighters."—Minneapolis Journal.

Cooling Down an Angry Pugilist.

Mr. Pat Sheedy has, and always has had, a remarkable influence over Sullivan. Sheedy is a gambler by occupation and his worst enemy will admit that he's as square as a die. The story goes that Sullivan once made a feint to strike Sheedy during the one and only dispute they ever had. As the champion drew back his fist the smooth-faced and unemotional gambler leaned forward until his face was within half a foot of that of the angry pugilist.

"I don't fight that way, John," he said, quietly. "When I make up my mind to fight you, you're gone. You know me. I never run a bluff, but this is a fair warning and the only one you'll ever receive.

Sullivan looked into the calm, gray eye of the man about whom so many stories of extraordinary nerve and quickness are recorded and dropped his hand. They get along capitally now.—Blakely Hall in The Ar aut.

Put Policemen in the Saddle.

A highly valued subscriber, who has spent his life in the army, suggests that there is urgent need of teaching the police of great cities to ride horses. Accoutrements should be kept at the stations, and each officer should have his saddle, blanket, bridle, sabre and pistol belt. These things should be inspected, and be always ready for use at an instant's notice. It is the opinion of our correspondent that all the horses of the city should be at the disposal of the police in times of great civil commotion.—The Current.

France Not a Commercial Nation.

The truth is that France is not intrinsically a commercial nation; it is an artistic one. The natural genius of the French runs to writing novels, painting pictures, composing music and not to driving bargains. Here, contrawise to the rule that holds in America, commerce is not an end in itself; it is simply a means to the enjoyment of life. Here art is—as it ought to be everywhere—the summit of the people's aspirations.—Sidney Luska in Inter-Ocean.

The committee appointed by the Board of Engineers to revise the by-laws of the department reported Friday evening. The following was added in regard to the companies responding to alarms of fire:—

Central station, one steamer; Hose 1 and Hook and Ladder 1 will report on the first alarm to every box.

Hose 2 will respond on the first alarm from boxes 7, 17, 18, 23, 25, 27, 28 and 37.

Hose 3 will respond on the first alarm from boxes 7, 8, 9, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 23, 28 and 37.

Hose 4 will respond on first alarms from boxes 7, 8, 17. 19, 23, 25, 27, 28 and 37.

Hose 5 will respond on the first alarms from boxes 7, 17, 18, 25, 27, 28, 29, 35 and 37.

Section 2 of this article says that the bells on the hose houses, (Hose 2, 3, 4 and 5) shall be rung after the first round has been struck on the big bell and whistle. Companies that do not respond on the first alarm will remain at their respective houses until the second alarm has been received, or the recall sounded. The recall will be sounded by two strokes on the bell and whistles.

Section 3d of the same article.—The bell on the Central Station will be rung only for an alarm from West Peabody, or for a call for assistance from out of town, and then only by order of the Chief Engineer or the Engineer in charge of the house.

Article 7 to be struck out of the by-laws.

It was voted to adopt the instructions to key holders and citizens, as reported by the committee.

Voted to raise the whistles.

Voted to have the bell on the Universalist Church rung for a general alarm, if necessity requires.

The meeting then adjourned.

O. B. Chadwick & Co. have issued an attractive four page card containing the location of boxes, where the keys are located and considerable information concerning the same. They were prepared under the supervision of the Engineers and will be found very convenient.

The Directors of the Relief Association held a special meeting Monday evening and voted to call a meeting of the Association at the Central Station, on Thursday evening, Aug. 12, for the purpose of electing a director to represent Steamer Company No. 1. Benefits were granted to driver Price for the time he has been laid up.

Salem has adopted the Pearce & Jones, of New York, electric fire alarm system. This system will require the keeping up of a Central Station with men on duty at all times to turn the alarm on to the bells and whistles. It cost less to put in than the Gamewell Company's best system, but how much less will it cost in the end?

The whistle on the pumping station is to be raised four feet. z

MADNESS FROM DRINK.

A WRETCH IN THE AGONIES OF DELIRIUM TREMENS.

Shocking Scene at a Hospital—Hallucinations of a Patient—A Physician Tells About the Cause and Treatment of the Disease.

"He's got mania potu," was the short diagnosis of the young doctor. "Put him in the strong room."

It wasn't so easily done, however. He fought like a devil incarnate, and the fiends which rose up around him at every turn seemed to lend strength to resist his supposed persecutors. In the awful struggle he released one of his hands and struck viciously at one of the men holding him. But he was at last overpowered. He would probably have killed the attendants one by one, but they were too many, and in fifteen minutes he was strapped down to a cot. Horrid reptiles crawled over the helpless body, which was at their mercy. A great poisonous snake which had found its way into the hospital was slowly creeping upon him to end his miserable existence. There was a terrible, despairing cry, which was deadened within those four padded walls, and the exhausted man fell back panting, breathless, and apparently dead. He soon revived to new and more loathsome hallucinations.

That horrid snake came back again reinforced by an alligator, while a tiger stuck his hungry jaws within the little room and gritted his teeth and opened his capacious jaws in anticipation of a palatable feast on the poor wretch tied to his bed. All this, and much more, the maddened man saw in his delirium. The transition was rapid from one horror to another, but there at last came a rest from the sickening spectacle.

QUIETING THE SHATTERED NERVES.

A doctor entered with a potion of chloral, which the frantic patient was forced to swallow. Presently the effect became noticeable. The sick man grew less violent, and the glaring eyes, resembling two balls of fire, grew calm and closed as if in slumber. The chloral did its work well, and sustained its reputation as a soporific specific. The raging lion is transformed into a peaceful, sleeping lamb, and immediate danger is over. In the morning the patient awoke comparatively refreshed, but he feels an unconquerable thirst for whisky. He is almost crazy for a drink, and declares he will have it or die. A very little is given him, which quiets the shattered nerves for a little while. By slow stages he was brought around all right, and in four or five days he was discharged cured of that attack, but he is liable to go through the same thing again before long.

"It is a strange disease," said a prominent hospital physician, "but modern science is able to control it better than formerly. The proper name for what is vulgarly called the 'jim-jams' is mania potu, or madness from drink. It is produced by excessive use of alcoholic stimulants. The nervous system becomes prostrated, and there is an imperfect circulation of the blood, which produces more or less congestion of the brain. A man's ideas flow with the utmost profusion, but there is no regulation or will power, and the sufferer is affected by illusions and hallucinations—false sensations of a real object, or intellectual perversion without any relation to a real object. In the former case the unfortunate man would think a ball rolling on the floor was a rat or a bat, or crouching bear. The man affected with hallucinations sees things which have no actual existence around him.

IN PAROXYSMS OF TERROR.

"The great feature of mania potu is the loss of voluntary or will power. It is always very difficult to control delirium tremens patients, because they can not be convinced by reason, and in former days they often died in paroxysms of terror. They gain superhuman strength, and men who, in their normal condition, could be easily handled by a single strong man are too much for three or four powerful attendants. The treatment formerly was to exhaust the patient by emetics. Now chloral or bromide of potassium are the sovereign remedies. Very few men die of delirium tremens, but they suffer ten thousand deaths while in the horrors of the delirium. I think periodical drinkers are more liable to mania potu than the steady topers. There are two classes of cases of the disease. In one the afflicted is possessed of a high fever, hot skin, and is inclined to violence, while in the other the skin is cool, sweaty and there is no manifestation of violence. Old Dr. Tolliver once had a fight for his life with a man who had delirium tremens, and they are often extremely dangerous to handle."

Many of the denizens of Vine street are familiar with the symptoms and terrors of the jim-jams, and have been in the hospital fighting monsters which the eye of a sane man has never yet beheld. The man who laughs at delirium tremens has never been through it. An old toper shivers every time he hears the expression and the most callous wretch feels pity for a fellow sufferer who has been tortured by the imaginary demons and reptiles which he himself has seen in his attacks of alcoholism, a mild term for the most intense suffering to which the human brain can be subjected.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Skins of a Thousand Horses.

The interesting fact was learned by a reporter that the hides of about 1,000 horses and the skins of at least ten times as many sheep are cut up into coverings for baseballs in this city every season. By one manufacturer alone three tons of yarn are used a year for the insides of baseballs. The hide and skin used is perfectly white, being alum tanned, and comes from Philadelphia. Out of one horse's hide the coverings for twelve dozen balls are cut, and out of one sheepskin three dozen. Two strips of th leather are required for each ball, cut wide, and rounding at each end so that they fit into each other when put around the yarn ball. Each piece, for a league ball, is seven inches long by two inches wide at the rounded ends. The pieces are cut with a die. Old-fashioned blue Shaker yarn is used for the inside of a League ball, which is wound tightly around a small rubber ball weighing exactly one ounce. The improved League ball has now double coverings of horsehide, which is regarded as a great improvement.—New York Mail and Express.

Some Beautiful Designs in Watches.

The new watches of smallest size exhibit the dead white silver covered with unique designs, with an open scroll work studded with tiny rubies; the ball watches. Again oxidized, with foliage and dog in high relief; a frog seated in graceful attitude is playing on a banjo and evidently singing, also in high relief. Another beautiful little watch has an oxidized hammered case, with horsemen in high relief leaping a fence, trees and hunting lodge in the distance. Others are oxidized and exquisitely enameled with flowers and vines. Another design consists of shells on water leaves in black enamel, with a spray of oxidized waves and spider in gold. The chains, just four inches long, are of various styles, hammered, filagree, chased, chain-mail, fish-scale, having curios in the way of pendants that promise to circulate through the whole encyclopædia of natural history. These are suspended with other devices.—New York Tribune.

The People to the Rescue!
Where Shall We Go?

TO US THIS IS THE QUESTION OF PARAMOUNT IMPORTANCE.

Obliged to vacate our MARKET STREET STORE by the First of August, and absolutely no-where to place the goods. What shall we do with the immense Stock? It is impossible for us to move it to our West Lynn Wholesale or Retail Stores in their present crowded condition without a loss and injury to our trade which would be incalculable. Whichever way we turn we see nothing but loss staring us in the face, and that the cloud may have a silver lining for some one, we are determined that Our Loss Shall be the People's Gain.

Time moves resistlessly on and the days between now and August 1st, to us, will come and go like a flash of lightning. We want to strain every nerve to Dispose of every Pair of Boots and Shoes that a total disregard of cost will enable us to before that time.

That the campaign may be short and the victory absolute we shall offer the people

A Royal Array of Matchless Bargains.

Therefore, while with us the anxious question is "WHERE SHALL WE GO," and no answer comes through the gathering gloom, with the people there is but one answer to the question.

Osborne's is the Place.

AT ONCE. Before the Stock is broken by the rush of bargain seekers who will crowd our two stores when they realize this most glorious opportunity. Last Saturday the people's answer was "SHARP AND DECISIVE," and we were obliged again to lock the doors of our Market Street Store against the crush and jam of excited customers.

NOW IS A CHANCE UNPARALLELED, and to maintain the furor at a fever heat that shall make havoc with our stock at once, we have inaugurated a series of sweeping cut prices on our standard lines that will do the business quick, and here we go for

The above are our choicest lines of standard goods and the original prices unapproachable by any shown by our competitors. At our cut prices, their equals have never been offered the public. These bargains are samples of the sweeping reductions in all departments. All broken, shopworn, and odd lots, must be marked at prices to sell. Our Prices SHALL sell them. Now is the time to prepare your Children for School after the summer vacation.

Our Monster Mark-Down Sales.

Each, in its turn, eclipsing its predecessors, have been a magnificent series of triumphs and this one in size, character of goods offered, and prices named, shall out-do them all. The people always alert to their own interests and keen for bargains, will show their approval of our efforts in their behalf.

Driven from Home and into the Street,
We'll never own or suffer defeat;
This blow of ill fortune backward we'll beat,
By prices our rivals never can meet.

The shipments of leather from Peabody and Salem for the week ending July 31 were 2897 rolls, 71 bundles, 20 barrels, 1 bale of leather, 8 bundles of skins.

The employes of Mr. Thomas Carroll were treated last Wednesday to a fine repast furnished by him in honor of his recent marriage, which was noted las week. His salesman, Mr. Charles Peabody, had charge of the collation.

The Danvers Mirror says: The members of Gen. Putnam Hose Co., have been supplied with badges. They are of nickel, with the words "Gen. Putnam" and a large figure 1 in the centre of the word hose. They were furnished by Mr. John F. Morland of this town.

Another hundred dollars was taken from Postmaster Ward's salary by the cutting down of the amount allowed for clerk hire. The new law also provides that postmasters are not to receive any compensation in addition to their salaries for the transaction of mony order or postal note business.

It is not generally known that coal which remains in store perfectly dry is rendered less valuable on that account, yet such is the fact. Most coal mines are satuated with water, and if this is drained off, the coal becomes flinty and valueless. Coal stored through the summer should be sprinkled and kept moist.

Among the chiefs-elect of the Great Council of Red Men of Mass., are J. P. Gardner, great senior sagamore; A. H. Paton, great chief of records; and A. H. Paton and William Scampton, representatives to Great Council. At the meeting in Boston last week Masconomo Tribe of this town was represented by Mr. S. S. Littlefield.

The new Mass. law regulating the sale of oleomargarine has gone into effect. Every dealer in imitation butter is requested to register with the inspector of milk or the clerk of the town. Pedlars must obtain licenses and all packages must be labeled "oleomargarine" or "butterine." For neglect of this requirement the fine is $100 to $200 and failure to register $20.

The Water Board approved the report of the engineer of the pumping station for July, as follows:—Number of gallons pumped, 19,997,820; average per day, 645,090; pounds of coal used, 46,917; average per day, 1613; gallons pumped per pound of coal, 426; running time per day, 7 hours, 51 minutes.

A young man, a stranger, came to Peabody at an early hour Thursday morning. He was destitute of clothing and had not even a name, but being a bright, promising little fellow, he was immediately adopted by our public carriage man, Mr. Henry C. The little son of Dr. H. A. Reynolds, Henry A. Reynolds, Jr., died at Detroit, Mich., recently, of inflammation of his brain, after an illness of two weeks. He was born in Wakefield, in February, 1882. He was a bright and promising little fellow, and his death is a sad blow to Dr. Reynolds, whose many friends in this town will extend him their heartfelt sympathy.

Mrs. Elizabeth, widow of the late Caleb Osborne, whose illness we had reported last week, died at her home on Lowell street last Monday morning at the advanced age of 86 years 7 months 14 days. Her funeral took place from her late residence last Saturday and was attended by a large number of friends of the family.

It is said that the same barbers who agreed to close their shops on Sunday, and petitioned the selectmen to prosecute any violators, will now open next Sunday. A few months ago they all wanted to close. Now they want to open. Perhaps a little inside reason for this anxiety to close a few months ago would be interesting reading. We rather think it would.

The people who remain at home find the Salem Willows a pleasant and agreeable resort. Is is deserving of all the patronage and notoriety it is receiving. Here is a pleasant resort where several thousand people, every Sunday, and other days, go for rest and recreation. There is no disturbance, but ladies and children can go thither without molestation or annoyance. It is because no liquor is sold or to be had on the grounds. Can as much be said of any other resort on our coast?

The superstitous people are not all dead yet. One man in this region thinks that the slow growth of corn this year is attributed to the lack of electricity in the earth, the manifold telephone, telegraph and electric wires and the iron railways have disturbed the old-time equilibrium. Another says that all the ills that vegetation is heir to, such as worms, grubs, beetles, bugs and lice, have come since the introduction of special fertilizers, and that in the day when barnyard manure held full sway most of these plagues were unknown.

Rev. Moses Smith of Detroit, Mich., preached a very forcible and eloquent sermon last Suuday at the South church, on the lesson to be learned from the book of Job. He dwelt particularly upon the fact that the troubles and afflictions which come upon us in this life can go no farther than is permitted by our Father in Heaven. "He is in your hands, but spare his life." The reverend gentleman spoke almost entirely without notes, and we think all heard him to their spiritual profit.

Stevens has got a cigar called Spark. That must be for our "Sparks" reporter and pastor of the Bethel. And while we are about it, there is a little joke which is credited to this same gentleman: A lady saw an engine house with a steeple, and innocently asked a gentleman attendant: "What church is that?" The gentleman after reading the sign, "Deluge, No. 3," replied: "I guess it mnst be the Third Baptist."

Poet's Corner.

Music.

Written by request for an entertainment.

By Lydia Davis Thompson.

Of all the gifts which Heaven bestows
Around the scenes of every day;
Of all the joys this wide earth knows
To cheer us through life's changing way,
That lures to please, instruct and charm,
'Tis Music bears the victor's palm.

When Nature tunes her voice to sing
Throughout her glad and halcyon hours,
From merry birds that swing and sing
In homestead tree and woodland bowers,
To echoing, murmuring, rippling rills,
With music all the air she fills.

We hear it in the wild-bee's drone,
When autumn winds their requiem chant,
And in the cicada's monotone
And in the streamlets sweet descant
And in the falling of the leaves,
Amid the binding of the sheaves.

The river winding through the leas
Goes singing by the verdant strand,
To meet the "many sounding seas,"
Where all earth's voices, deep and grand
And low and sweet and brave and strong,
Blend into one harmonious song.

'Tis borne upon the zephyr's breath
That wakes to life the opening flowers,
And in the storms that tell their death
And in the tempest's raging powers;
And in the wind's low, sullen moan
In dreary winter cold and lone.

From mountain-top to billowy deep,
In every moving thing we see,
Doth nature her glad rhythm keep,
Without the aid of string or key;
In harmony sings her roundelay
Year after year, day after day.

There's music 'mid the battle's van,
In bugle-call and rolling drum,
When man forgets his brother man
As war to war bids them to come—
To hide or soothe men's dying moans
She lends her bravest, tenderest tones.

'Tis heard in merry bells that chime,
From ivied tower and humble dome,—
On native soil; in alien clime;
Around the hillocks of our home,
That wandering winds bear sweet along,
Immortalized in English song,

From organ grand, and lute and lyre,
She lends her dulcet strains to please,
And set the living soul on fire
When white winged-fingers touch the keys—
But, where the voice that with them chimes,
Without the poet's measured rhymes!

It adds a charm to human speech,
When loving thoughts the tones control,
And hearts are speaking each to each
The inner language of the soul;
Or when keen joy its depths has stirred
To overflowing, rapturous word.

But when the voice breaks forth in song,
And all the soul's bright powers uplift
To swell its praises loud and long,
'Tis then we feel this heaven-sent gift;
When human voice her force displays
'Tis then we wonder, love and praise,

Her power can make us weep or smile,
And us her potency revere;
Her charms the laggard hours beguile,
To soothe, to comfort or to cheer;
In all that wondrous art can teach
Her boundless depths we cannot reach.

Nor earth cannot her richness hold,
For this belongs to yon bright heaven,
Where angels strike their harps of gold—
Ah, there its fulness will be given
In melody rapt, divinely sweet,
Where joys are rounded and complete.

Hay Fever.—I have been a great sufferer from hay fever for 15 years, and have tried various things without doing any good. I read of the many wondrous cures of Ely's Cream Balm and thought I would try once more. In fifteen minutes after one application I was wonderfully helped. Two weeks ago I commenced using it and now I feel entirely cured. It is the greatest discovery ever known or heard of.—Duhamel Clark, Farmer Lee, Mass.

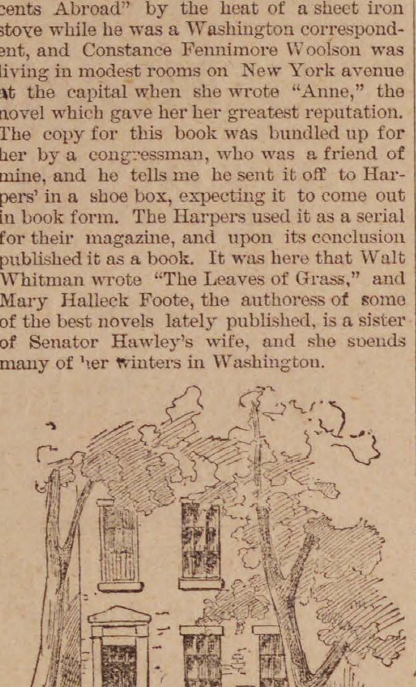
LITERARY WORKSHOPS

OF WASHINGTON AND THE HABITS OF THEIR OWNERS

Frances, Hodgson Burnett, Emma Southworth, and Mrs. Admiral Dahlgren—Joaquin Miller's Eccentricities. Librarian Spofford's Activity.

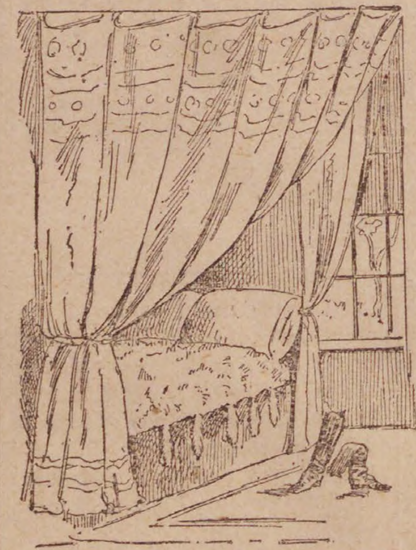
[Special Correspondence.]

Washington, July 20.—Washington has become one of the great literary centers of the United States, and it has turned out some of the most noted books and book writers in the country. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was written by Harriet Beecher Stowe for a Washington paper. Mark Twain penned "The Innocents Abroad" by the heat of a sheet iron stove while he was a Washington correspondent, and Constance Fennimore Woolson was living in modest rooms on New York avenue at the capital when she wrote "Anne," the novel which gave her her greatest reputation. The copy for this book was bundled up for her by a congressman, who was a friend of mine, and he tells me he sent it off to Harpers' in a shoe box, expecting it to come out in book form. The Harpers used it as a serial for their magazine, and upon its conclusion published it as a book. It was here that Walt Whitman wrote "The Leaves of Grass," and Mary Halleck Foote, the authoress of some of the best novels lately published, is a sister of Senator Hawley's wife, and she spends many of her winters in Washington.



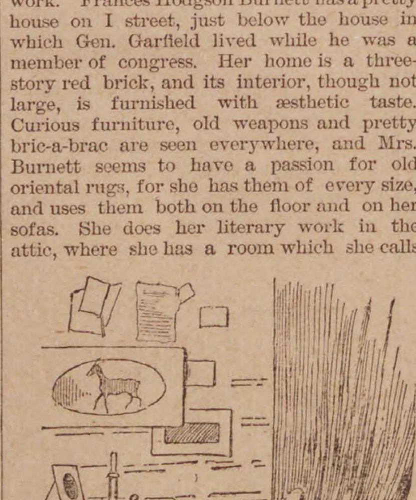
MRS. BURNETT'S HOME.

Tom Benton wrote his "Thirty years in the United States Senate" in an old, brown stuccoed house of four stories on C street, and it was in this house that he penned his abridgement of "The Debates of Congress." James G. Blaine wrote the first volume of his "Twenty Years in Congress" in three different houses of Washington. He began it while he was living next to Gen. Beale, and just above the house where Mrs. Sickles used to flirt with Barton Key. He continued it in his great mansion on Dupont's circle, which he now rents to a Chicago millionaire for $13,000 a year, and he completed it in Senator Windom's big brick, just across from where Secretary Endicott lives, and facing Scott's circle. Sam Cox wrote his "Three Decades of Federal Legislation" in his pretty green stone home on Dupont circle, which he sold for $50,000 cash before he left for Turkey, and George Bancroft has written a great part of his historical work in his roomy brick residence, which looks out upon H street, just above the palace of the millionaire Corcoran.

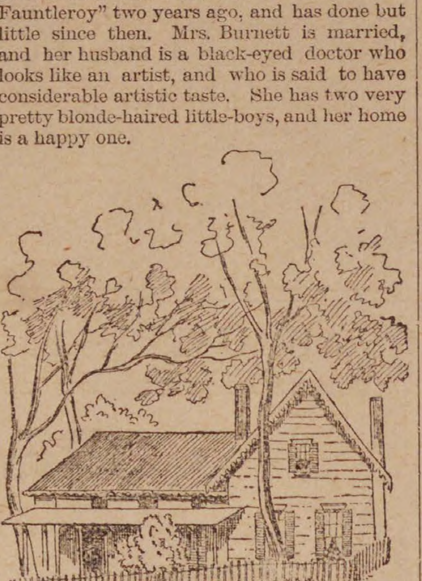


JOAQUIN MILLER'S CABIN.

There is a great deal of literary work being done here all the time, and in this letter I will take you into a few of the literary workshops, and show you how some writers live and work. Frances Hodgson Burnett has a pretty house on I street, just below the house in which Gen. Garfield lived while he was a member of congress. Her home is a three-story red brick, and its interior, though not large, is furnished with æsthetic taste. Curious furniture, old weapons and pretty bric-a-brac are seen everywhere, and Mrs. Burnett seems to have a passion for old oriental rugs, for she has them of every size, and uses them both on the floor and on her sofas. She does her literary work in the attic, where she has a room which she calls her den. She writes easily, is not particular about pencils, and often jots down her ideas on odd scraps of paper. Mrs. Burnett is a rather pretty blonde, and her years are, I suppose, under the forties. She is of medium height, has dark auburn hair, a broad forehead and pleasant blue eyes. She told me once she could not remember the time that she began writing, and that her first story, entitled "Miss Carruthers' Engagement," she wrote when she was 15. She received $20 for this from Mrs. Godey, of the Lady's Book, and soon furnished them another, for which she got $35. After a time she became acquainted with Peterson, of Peterson's Magazine, and it was only a few years ago that she got into The Century. Her books now sell as well as those of any novelist of to-day, and her inducements to write have been so great that she overtaxed herself about two years ago, and has not been very well since. She wrote the story which is now coming out in St. Nicholas under the title of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" two years ago, and has done but little since then. Mrs. Burnett is married, and her husband is a black-eyed doctor who looks like an artist, and who is said to have considerable artistic taste. She has two very pretty blonde-haired little-boys, and her home is a happy one.



THE TABLE WHERE MILLER WORKS.



PROSPECT COTTAGE, MRS SOUTHWORTH'S HOME.

Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth is another Washington novelist, and she is perhaps the most prolific writer in the country. She is 66 years old, and has written a novel for every year of her life. All of her work is taken by Robert Bonner, of The Ledger, and she has not furnished a page of manuscript to any other publisher for years. It is said that Bonner pays her $10,000 a year for everything that she writes, but I have no basis for this statement except rumor. There is no doubt but that she is well paid, and the cottage which she owns here on the Georgetown Heights, though it lacks paint, is covered with vines, and it makes a very pleasant home. It commands a view of the Potomac, Arlington and the Virginia hills, and a cool wind from the south blows through it day and night. Mrs. Southworth began her writing at Washington, and her first story was published in The National Era. She writes the same character of stories to-day that she did then. They are full of blood and thunder and of love and longing. She turns them out as though she were a machine, and is not dependent at all upon her moods. She grinds out everything with her own hands, writing boldly with a large gold pen. She revises her proofs herself, and often works far into the night. She writes generally from Tuesday until Thursday night, and spends Friday and Saturday in visiting, while on Monday she revises her proofs. She is a close reader of the newspapers, and, like Charles Reade, she takes a great many of her stories from the facts she finds in them.

Another woman writer of Washington is Mrs. Admiral Dahlgren, who owns one of the best houses of the capital city. She lives just across from Gen. Bob Schenck, our former minister to England, and a little in front of the house of Senator Conger, of Michigan. She has written a book about South mountain, her country home, near here, giving a collection of weird stories and legends of the romantic region in which it is located. Mrs. Dahlgren is the widow of Admiral Dahlgren. She is an Ohio girl, and her father was, I think, a member of congress. She is posted on society matters, and is an authority on Washington etiquette, about which she has written a book.

One of the queerest literary characters of Washington is Joaquin Miller, who owns a log cabin on one of the hills above the city. Mr. Miller cultivates the wild eccentricities of western life, and I have thought at times that he affects a good many of these for the advertisement it gives him. He goes about Washington in a slouch hat, with his pantaloons in his boots and his long red hair flowing down upon his brawny shoulders. As you talk to him a dreamy, far-off look will come into his eyes, and he will make the most outlandish statements, spiced with poetry, in regard to matters in the conversation. He used to gallop about Washington on horseback, scaring the children, in the costume of a western cowboy, and a part of his attire was a pair of pantaloons made of the furred skin of the Angora goat. He had a silver pommel to his saddle as big as a soap dish and his stirrups were as big as a half-peck measure. Miller has received a good deal of money from his writing, but he spends a great deal, and I doubt whether he owns much more than the little property that he has here. The interior of his cabin here is as queer as the outside. The walls are made of wood logs and chinked with plaster, and Mr. Miller keeps his papers by tacking them to the walls with pins. He has a couch under the window, and there is a bed covered with skins behind a portiere made of rich oriental cloths. Joaquin writes on a pine table, which probably cost about $1, and the unpainted poplar chair he sits upon could be bought anywhere for fifty cents. There is no cloth upon the table, and a plain inkstand and a steel pen are his only materials. He has no system in his writing, and can only write when the humor seizes him. His penmanship is harder to read than the hieroglyphics of the obelisks, and he cannot write at all if there is any other person present than himself. He once told me that the presence of a child constrained his hand, and that he has found himself posing before every girl he talked to. "I must be alone," he said, "to do good work, and I cannot dictate satisfactorily." Joaquin Miller began writing by sending letters to a weekly newspaper in Oregon. The first pay he got for literary work was $50 for a magazine article to The Overland Monthly, and he considers his best work the novel he wrote, called "One Fair Woman."

One queer thing about Miller is that he never allows telegram boys to deliver messages to him at his cabin, and he frightened one nearly to death not long ago by threatening to shoot if he came inside the gate.

Mr. Ainsworth Spofford, the librarian of congress, is a book maker as well as a book lender. He is a dark faced man with a frame made of wire and filled with activity. Between 50 and 60 years of age he does more work than any young man of 25 in Washington, and he never wastes an idle moment. He understands how to make other men work for him, and he can dictate as smoothly as he writes. He has a brusque way of talking and a rather rough voice, but he is business from the start, and he allows no one from messenger to senator to consume his valuable time foolishly. He is always ready, however, to give information, and that little dark head of his seems to have packed away in its cells the whole contents of the congressional library. Tell him what you want to know of a subject. He will put his finger upon an electric bell, give a word to one of his assistants, and in a moment you have before you the very material you want. Mr. Spofford owns a very pleasant home on Massachusetts avenue in the most fashionable part of Washington. It is a wide, red brick, and is worth I should say at least $15,000. He rides to this every evening in the red Herdic. He always carries a green bag with him out of which he pulls a book as soon as he enters and reads all the way to and from the Capitol. Mr. Spofford's work shop, however, is in the congressional library. His little alcove behind the librarian's desk is always filled with books and papers, arranged in the most systematic order, and Mr. Spofford generally has an assistant by his side whom he is using as a machine to carry on the labor upon which his mind is engaged.

Mr. Spofford and George Bancroft are great friends, and they take regular horseback rides into the country together. Every Sunday afternoon you may see them trotting out of Washington at a good round pace, and it is hours before they return.

Speaking of Bancroft, he is still a worker, and at 86 he grinds away as many hours daily as he did when he was secretary of the navy under President Polk. He sleeps in his library, and has a little single bed there with a table standing beside it upon which are two candlesticks. If a thought occurs to him in the night he jots it down. He rises early and he has his breakfast about 8 o'clock, which is always a light one. He works then on until about 1, when he takes a lunch. Shortly after this he goes out to ride on horseback or drive and he can ride thirty miles without tiring his old, sinewy frame. He shows the signs of age, however, in his hair and beard, which are as white as slacked lime, and in the many wrinkles which show upon his parchment-like face. He uses a stenographer in his work and polishes and repolishes. It is his habit first to dictate his thoughts to his secretary, who takes them down in shorthand, goes off to the other room of the library and writes them out on the type writer. Mr. Bancroft revises this and the revision is again printed. He corrects and recorrects until he has it polished to suit his taste. He considers 250 words a good day's work, and how small an amount this is will be seen when I tell you that it makes only about one page of an octavo volume, or about one-fifth of a column of a newspaper. Bancroft's library is on the second floor of his house. It comprises three large rooms, and Bancroft works in a room about, I should say at a guess, 20 by 20. The shelves which line its walls have double rows of books on each of them, and he has more than 15,000 volumes in the library. He has made it a principle to buy every book that he could find upon his hobby of United States history, and he has hundreds of valuable manuscripts, which have cost him a great deal. While he was minister to England he made extracts from the public archives of England and France, and the documents of this collection comprise more than 200 volumes. His books are in all languages, and he reads and talks the German and French like the English. He considers his history finished as far as it can be, and his great reputation has been made by laying out a great mission for himself early in life, and sticking to it throughout his career.

Corsets for Men.

"Do gentlemen wear those—those corsets much?" I asked.

"Yes, madam," the young man answered. "They improve the figure."

I was willing to get further information.

"But do they call them corsets?"

"No, madam, they calls 'em supportahs."

A little while after that I was going along the street with a gentleman who was so swell-looking that it was a real satisfaction to walk beside him. I know every other woman was looking back and wondering who that distinguished looking man was. Well, he had a dime in his hand convenient to pay car fare with. It slid unluckily through his gloved fingers and fell upon the sidewalk. He sidled this way and sidled that, and if you'd believe me, as true as I live, he could not stoop down to pick up that dime. If his life had depended on it I think he scarcely could have done it. He stared helplessly at it, turning red and half giggling till I reached down myself and picked it up, and handed it to him with a great flourish. It was a plain case of a supporter. The colored young man informed me that it was quite common for gentlemen to wear these "figure improvers." I rejoice at it. It is a sign of progress. I only hope that as a next step stuffed cushions a foot square will be loaded upon their backs, and that stiff steel semi-circles will be gathered into their coat skirts, for them to sit down upon. Their pockets, meantime, should be tucked away between the stuffed cushion and the steel springs, so that they will have to poke their hands away around to their backbones to get at them, and when found they will be no bigger than a rat hole, for fear of destroying the "style" of the garment. If the already heavy cloth of which their garment is made should be folded three thicknesses deep, and wrapped around them as if they were mummies, then the estimable masculine sex would know something of the delights of the stunning and "stylish" tailor made dresses that the women wear at present.

PARAGUAY'S PEOPLE.

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL LITTLE CAPITAL.

Scenes in the Streets—A Cart of Quibracha Wood—The Women Comely and Modest Faced—Society Ladies—The Marriage Relation—Schools.

To properly present Paraguay and its beautiful little capital, Asuncion, is a task something like that of properly estimating the value of a stout, obstreperous boy who has exhibited pluck and been worsted, but whose texture is sure to make him a future. As we steam up in front of the capital it appears at its best. Lying on a gentle slope rising from the bank of the river, the city is seen in every section at a glance. The white houses, though only one story high, have the appearance of thrift. In the foreground is the unfinished palace of the tyrant Lopez. It was intended to be the best house in the republic.

Away in the distance one sees the tower of the railroad depot, a fine, modern building. The railroad runs into the country about forty miles. The Spanish American hotel is a superior building, once a palace. It is built around a pateo. Its entrance is stately, with large columns. Its pateo is enriched with the same massive and tasteful pillars. We found no English here except in the cooking. This was a most fortunate place to find English, with a little Spanish of my own, and with a most elaborate and accurate and ready amount in my companion, Dr. Wood. We fared much better in talking with the natives than we did in eating with them.

SCENES IN THE STREETS.

The streets, running parallel with the river and near it, are sufficiently level to admit of the use of wagons. There are very few carts and no wagons to be seen. These carts are drawn by ropes hitched to the girth of the horse. The nearest approach to a carriage was a cart of quibracha wood, made without any iron, having not even a linchpin of iron. The felloes are about six inches wide, and the hubs twenty inches in diameter. The wheels are low. The box sets flat down on the axletree. There are willow work sides to the box three feet high, and a corrugated, galvanized sheet-iron roof. This is drawn by oxen with a crossbar tied on the horns. Some of your readers who saw the Red River outfits of the half-breeds in the early days will appreciate the music made by these carts in motion. The wheels, never greased, excel a troupe of horse fiddles. It is related that one man greased his cart wheels and stopped the noise. And he also stopped his cattle. They refused to go in silence. The quibracha cart was the nearest approach to a carriage we remember to have seen during the days of our stay in the capital. It is owned by a wealthy English gentleman, long a resident of the city. He keeps it for the comfort and pleasure of his wife and children. Travel in Paraguay, away from the rivers, is either on foot or on horseback.

The people are chiefly Guarani, or mixed Guarani and Spanish, with very few Spanish. They are gentle, docile and pleasant in appearance. The women are the chief mark and product of the country. They are comely and modest faced. Their dress is sparse, adapted to the heat of the climate and to their poverty. Their dress is intended to consist of a white cotton skirt, stopping a little above the ankle; a chemise, with lace-embroidered yoke, open to the waist, and a piece of cotton cloth, not unlike a sheet, wrapped about the head and shoulders. Thus attired, with their black eyes and usually brunette faces, they make a picturesque appearance. Many of them are without the skirt, and some chiefly pure Guarani women have only the sheet-like wrap. Then this is worn wrapped round the body, either over the shoulders or under the arms, covering the body. At certain hours in the day the street is filled with these women attending to their marketing. They constitute the great mass of the population, and do nearly, if not quite all, the work. In the market (the building covers a large square or block) one sees more than a thousand of these women, moving about in all directions. We saw but one woman on the street wearing shoes.

THE MARRIAGE RELATION.

The ladies who compose what we call society are very few, and are dressed and cultivated after the fashions of Europe. It is said to be almost impossible to find a score of them in the entire republic outside of the capital and the nine chief towns. The women greatly exceed the men in number—in the whole country more than two to one, in the cities sometimes twenty to one. They nearly all have families. The marriage ceremony is not considered a necessity. It may rather be called a luxury for the opulent. Not long since a priest, by direction of the authorities, announced that he would marry, free of charge, any persons who wished the service. This offer reached hundreds of families not formally married, but not one accepted the offer. This state of things has been brought about by the war and by the high charges made by the priests for performing the marriage ceremony. In the states down the river, and here also, formerly the lowest price was $40. Without this sum the priest would not serve them. Many of them never in all their lives have so much money. This has not prevented their essential marriage, though it deprived them of a marriage ceremony. This has proportionately decreased the sanctity of the covenant.

It is the hope of Paraguay that she is shaking herself free from her old superstitions and is intensely interested in the education of her children. As our steamer, Cisne, anchored from time to time in the leisurely methods of southern travel, frequent conversations with the natives discovered a widespread interest in schools. While the half-clad women carried oranges on their heads through the hot sun to load on ship, men sat in the shade and drank mate, a native tea. They had come to the solitary house on the bank of the river to watch the loading of the oranges. They manifested the deepest interest in all the details of this educational system, and in the provisions made by the government to give the children of these women a chance. Over 100 youths are taken from the public schools—selected by competitive examinations—and educated at the capital. All bills are paid and their future is practically secured. This touches every community in the republic. The standard in the National university is not very high, but it is a good start, and must move forward.—Bishop C. H. Fowler in Chicago News.

A Result of Judicious Flattery.

Smith—Brown, you're fine this morning.

Brown (pleased)—Think so?

Smith—I know so. You look as fresh as a daisy.

Brown (more pleased)—Yes?

Smith—Yes. You can stay out with the boys and show up in the morning all right.

Brown (more than pleased)—Yes, a little thing like that don't affect me much.

Smith—It don't affect you a particle. I never saw such a man. I say, Brown, can you lend me a fiver?

Brown (with absolute enthusiasm)—Certainly, my dear boy, certainly.—New York Sun.

The majority of the "oil paintings" imposed upon the credulous citizens of New York at $2 each are made for thirty-five cents.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Most of the musical items this weather concentrate around the beaches and mountain resorts. All who can are taking a brief rest at some of these places, and giving impromptu musicales for the guests. The bands are in good demand at the hotels. What would a fashionable watering place be to-day without a band? It must not only be a band for the evening, but there must be a musical accompaniment to the important diversion of eating dinner.

The Salem Cadet Band gave their usual concert last Sunday evening at the Willows, repeating by desire the Overture to William Tell, which was given two Sundays ago. An opportunity was given the hearers to know what was going on, by a neat programme of the concert, issued by John J. Cahill of this town. The innovation was appreciated by the visitors, and it will be continued during the season.

The Salem Cadet Band played last Friday night at a series of concerts given by them at Nahant in the private houses of the residents of that fashionable resort. They also gave a concert at Danvers last evening.

Miss Katie F. Linehan was organist at St. John's church last Sunday.

The Salem Brass Band play this evening at the Willows.

Another grand Musical Festival will be inaugurated at the Point of Pines under the direction of Manager Thayer and Musical Director Baldwin, beginning Sunday August 15, and continuing 8 days. Those who remember and attended the festivals of the past two years will be pleased to hear of this. We learn that the Salem Cadet Band cannot be among the attractions—on account of previous engagements. Their services were desired by the management, as their playing last year gave great satisfaction.

Miss Gertrude Edmands, who was the contralto soloist at the last concert of the Salem Oratorio Society, has been engaged for the Worcester Musical Festival and to sing the Messiah for the Handel & Haydn Society of Boston.

Messrs. Norris & Semons, the musical sketch artists, are having a very successful summer season at the different seaside hotels in this vicinity, where they give parlor entertainments. They played at the Nanepashemet and Ocean Houses last week and also at the Clifton House.

The Musical Record is superb both in matter and typography. All students of music should be readers of it, and thus gain that which is instructive and valuable. Edited by Dexter Smith and published by Oliver Ditson & Co. Boston, $1 per year.

Mlle. De Lussan will be the prima donna of the Boston Ideal Opera Company next season, reports of a Paris engagement notwithstanding.

The Salem Band orchestra played last Monday evening at Clifton, last evening at Beverly Farms and this evening the full band plays at the Willows.

The new Swedish soprano Mme. Pyk will be the leading soloist at the Worcester Musical Festival. There are also engaged Jules Jordan, of Providence, R. I., Whitney Mockridge and William Courtney of N. Y. The programme will include Bruch's "Arminius," Gounod's "Redemption," Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," Rheinberger's "Toggenberg," Rubinstein's "Die Nixie," and Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia."

No lady who desires to keep well posted in the fashions of the day will be without the Season, which is one of the best published. It's an English Magazine represented in this country by the International News Co., and every number has colored plates enough to more than pay for the cost of the magazine. They are practical, desirable and choice. In addition, there is everything a lady could wish regarding the latest designs and styles in dresses, wraps, embroidery needle work, etc. It is invaluable to every lady, call for it at Mrs. Gilson's; or send directly to the International News Co., New York.

The August number of Harper's Magazine is in every way a timely reminder of the midsummer season. This seasonableness, perhaps, impresses us most in Mr. Warner's delightful story, Their Pilgrimage. F. W. Burbidge, curator of the Botanical Gardens, Trinity College, Dublin, contributes an exceedingly interesting paper on orchids, which is beautifully illustrated by William Hamilton Gibson. Dr. T. M. Coan's article on French Mineral Springs will prove useful as well as attractive reading. Edmund Kirke contributes an entertaining article on Detroit, the City of the Strait, Mr. Blackmore's novel, Springhaven, is in this number full of exciting incident and character. In the second of his Social Studies, Dr. Richard T. Ely discusses The Economic Evils in American Railway Methods. Poems are contributed by T. B. Aldrich, Annie Fields, and Dinah Maria Craik.

For positive curative effects, one bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is worth three of any other name.

GENERAL NOTES.

In choosing fish one has a chance to show considerable judgment. Fish should be fresh at their best—should be just from the water, but this is not always possible. The freshness of a fish is indicated by its being firm and stiff; in prime condition, if held out in the hand it will remain rigid, any drooping of the tail shows that it is not quite right and the extent of this drooping is a fair guide in judging of its condition. Poisonous qualities begin to develop in fish as soon as any decay, however slight, takes place.

Nothing is easier than to grow rich. It is only to trust nobody; to befriend none; heap interest upon interest, cent upon cent; to destroy all the finer feelings of nature, and be rendered mean, miserable and despised for some twenty or thirty years and riches will come as sure as disease, disappointment and a miserable death.

Farmers as well as residents of the town should read every advertisement in this paper. These ads. are invitations from our business men who invite you to come to their places of business. They want to show goods, they want you to look at them whether you buy or not. If you are doing most of your trading with a merchant that does not advertise, we will bet you a five dollar note you are paying 10 per cent. more for the article, than what it can be purchased for of a merchant who advertises. Now before laying this paper aside read every advertisement in it.

The new stamped letter sheet soon to be issued by the Postoffice Department promises to be a great convenience to the public. It is a letter-sheet envelope combined, a perforated line running round the sheet with the narrow spaces outside overspread with mucilage, so that the sheet may be folded and securely fastened. The letter when ready for mailing, resembles the style in use before envelopes were invented. This the government stamps in loose sheets and collectly in pads, and it will be put on sale at some of the leading postoffices throughout the country. As it can be produced at a very low figure, and affords the same security that an envelope does, it is expected to take the place, to a considerable extent, of the postal card.

An accident in a Melbourn foundry has led to the discovery that plunging iron castings into a mixture of treacle and water softens the metal to such a degree that it can be punched, bored and tapped as readily as wrought iron.

An exchange truthfully says: Its amusing for an editor, when soliciting, to hear a man say, 'It doesn't pay to advertise.' Why does this man put out signs? Why does he obstruct the pavement in front of his store with samples of the goods he sells? That's advertising too. Why does he daub the head of a mackerel barrel or a dry goods box with the words, 'AlL oUr goOds cheap,' and stick it up in a keg of beans or pile of calico in his store? Why does he place his name on fence boards, and insert it in street-gutter pamphlets? That's advertising, but it is of that kind that brings little in return.

The Philadelphia Times, edited by Colonel McClure, remarks very pointedly, but still very truthfully that what "this Administration desires to have understood is that a man isn't entitled to a pension because he went to a military demonstration as a spectator in June, 1865, or stubbed his toe against a stone while walking home from a church picnic in 1863 with his best girl hanging on his arm. It really is necessary to draw the line at just about this place." Colonel McClure was a soldier himself.

Mrs. Emma Molloy, well known in Northern Indiana as a temperance lecturess and editress, was recently indicted by the grand jury of Green county, Mo., on two charges—the first, of being a party to the bigamous marriage of George E. Graham, of Fort Wayne, to Cora E. Lee, her adopted daughter, and the second with being accessory to the murder of Sarah Graham, the aforesaid Graham's lawful wife, after the commission of the crime. It is said that new and more startling evidence has come to light.

If there ever was a specific for any one complaint, then Carter's Little Liver Pills are a specific for sick headache, and every woman should know this. Only one pill a dose.

St. Nicholas for August goes out-of-doors to seek congenial topics for its readers, who are spending their vacations by the sea, among the mountains, or in country homes. The frontispiece, by Mary Halleck Foote, gives us a bright glimpse child-life at the seaside, while the opening article A Rocky Mountain Hermit is a delightful account of a Robinson Crusoe summer spent among the birds, beasts, and mountains of Wyoming. A new and original outdoor game, called Regatta, is described by Frank Bellew. In spite of its nautical name, it is played ashore, though it has a strong sea flavor.

If you are nervous or dyspeptic try Carter's Little Nerve Pills. Dyspepsia makes you nervous, and nervousness makes you dyspeptic; either one renders you miserable and these little pills cure both.

A Great Victory
A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by
Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." Charles A. Roberts, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

Sick Headache.

Gents:—I have been subject to Sick Headache for years, and have tried, in vain, many advertised remedies and several physicians, but all to no purpose. At last I tried your B. B. Bitters—without much faith, I admit—but to-day I can truly say, that after taking the third bottle, I have not suffered from it. I recommend it to all my friends; several have been cured by it. My little grandson was permanently cured of Biliousness and Sick Headache, which were so severe as to cause convulsions. They have all ceased since he commenced the use of B.B.B.

THE LABOR question in this country, of which the trouble now existing in town is a part, will not be settled hastily—it cannot be decided in a day, a month or a year. All is not right on one side, and all wrong on the other. The paper which has the welfare and good of the community at heart will endeavor to look beyond the wholesale condemnation of either the Knights of Labor or the Manufacturers. Both are integral parts of the body politic. In the contest at present going on, others besides the actors are interested. It is easy to point out the mistakes of this man or that faction; to win the applause of this or that party by a sharp arraignment of those whose views are in conflict with ours; mayhap by that means we may be considered as doing a great public good by those who agree with us that our opponents should be denounced, and that strife and bitter feeling should be encouraged and provoked.

We do not consider that our duty lies in this direction. The welfare of our town, its business interests and prosperity—not in one particular branch of industry but in all—are paramount to the disagreement of any party or parties. The condition of business in this town, taken as a whole, is not improved by the present condition of things. It will deteriorate so long as they exist. And beyond this, so long as the differences between the one side or the other are magnified, so long as one side is held up in the public prints to the most fulsome praise and the other to odium, be that side whichever it may, so long is kindled anew a feeling of bitterness between the employe and employer, which ought not to exist.

We said last week that both sides had made mistakes. The Knights of Labor make a mistake when they go beyond the right which they have to set a price on their own labor. They made a mistake regarding the splitters' price list which was offered to our manufacturers, with its accompaniments. It went too far. It decided for the manufacturer not only the price of labor, but the method of conducting his business. Then it was that retaliation was begun, and it is along this line that arbitration is refused. So long as it is the right of the laboring man to sell his labor at his own price, so long it is the right of the manufacturer to conduct his business in his own manner. No organization or body of men should assume to tell him when he shall conduct business, or where, or how. When that occurs, there can be no business relations between the employed and employer. It strikes at the foundation of all business, as transacted in this country.

The manufacturers made a mistake in demanding that the employes should renounce the organization to which they belong before they could be reinstated in their employ. Their order or circular denies to the men the same privilege they claim for themselves—the right to organize for self protection. Two wrongs can never make one right. The manufacturers came together and organized: effected a combination for protection, as they had a right to do. There is no doubt, either, of the wisdom of such action. On the other hand the workmen was already organized; they belong, or the most of them, to a secret order for their own protection. Is it not their right? In denying the men the price for their labor which is asked, in resisting any attempt at change in their method of business, the manufacturers exercise a perfectly legitimate and proper privilege. But in seeking to compel the men to give up their allegiance to this society they go too far. In this country every citizen is a free man. Among his privileges is the right to think, act and vote for himself. This is the bulwark of a free ballot. Would our manufacturers refuse to employ a man because he belonged to this or that church or party; or was a member of the Odd Fellows or Masons, or one of the numerous other secret organizations of our town? The principle must be the same in refusing, per se, to employ a man because he belongs to the Knights of Labor.

It may be, as the Shoe & Leather Reporter puts it, that the workmen, in remaining out, are unconsciously serving the interests of the employers. The price of leather has advanced, and the closing of the shops will prevent an overstock of the market. The liability of accumulating a surplus stock, to lay over, will thus be counteracted. There will be a better demand for leather. At the same time the tendency will be to make a fall in the price of hides. For several years the price of hides has been very high, and that of leather, when finished, very low. It is not a matter of opinion but a fact, that the margin in manufacturing leather has been very small. The large firms, with plenty of capital, increased labor saving appliances, and good credit, have made both ends meet, perhaps more. But it is not hard, in this town, to count up men who, ten or a dozen years ago, were doing a good and successful business, but have gone out of it, because they could see no money in continuing. All these things ought to be taken into consideration by the workmen in regulating the price of labor.

On the other hand, the prosperity of a country, as a whole, lies not in the accumulation of wealth among the few, but in a well fed, well paid and contented common people. We can conceive of the continuance of these difficulties until the workmen are compelled, by lack of means, to renounce the order of Knights of Labor, and accept the terms offered them. But what sort of a surrender would that be? Would the men be content? Would it not be at the price of a surrender of their personal liberty?

The longer, again, that the difficulty lasts and the men are out of employment, the deeper grows the feeling between employer and employe. In a town like this, such things ought not to be. Many of the workmen out of employment are our best citizens: they have homes and families; belong perhaps to the same church, and are otherwise brought into social relations with their employers. The shut down, thus far, has probably been of little injury to the manufacturers. As we have said, it has likely been of advantage to them. But the business of the town, in other respects, is visibly affected. The workmen have no money to spend. They are not likely to suffer, because of the relief which is being sent from other assemblies in the country. We think the matter could be fairly, honorably and speedily settled by arbitration. It is no new way of settling matters. Business men, often, in their dealings with each other, are led into difficulties necessitating adjustment by third parties. Why not leave it either to the new Board of Arbitration appointed by Gov. Robinson, or to a local Board, one man selected from each side—these two to select a third.

WE REGARD the election of Rev. Mr. Spaulding, as Selectman, a piece of inconsistency not only on his own part, but on the part of those who supported and elected him. Several years since, an attempt was made to have the Boards of Selectmen and Assessors composed of different persons. The law makes them two Boards—but this town, like many others, has invariably elected the same individuals as members of each Board. Last year the separation was partially successful. Two Assessors were NOT selectmen; two selectmen were NOT assessors. The advocates of this division received mainly their support from the party which last Monday evening elected Rev. Mr. Spaulding. Herein they were not consistent. The gentleman like all the other Selectmen, save one, is now, also, assessor.

But the majority of our fellow citizens have elected Mr. Spaulding, and in their decision we cheerfully acquiesce. We hoped to see Mr. Goulding elected, but circumstances prevented many, on whom his friends relied for aid, from seeing their way clear to vote for him, and this accounts, mainly, for the apparent smallness of his vote. As far as our connection with Mr. Goulding's candidacy was concerned, everything was done fairly and honorably. In our presentation of his claims last week, nothing was said which, by any possible twisting, could be converted into any disrepect for, or disparagement of either of the other candidates. Therefore we have no occasion to change anything therein said. If Mr. Grosvenor had been the choice of our citizens we should have as cheerfully extended to him our congratulations and hearty support.

Mr. Spaulding has done good service as Assessor, The work has got out of the old ruts. The increased valuation comes where it can be easiest borne; and where, as we understand it, it should have been placed in years past. Despite the larger amount of money raised by taxation, the rate is $16.00 against $15.60 last year. It is nearly the same. To Mr. Spaulding is due the credit of a large share of this. If he does the town as valuable a service on the Board of Selectmen, the town will have no occasion to regret the election of last Monday night.

The Boston Record in a recent issue contains the following complimentary notice of a native of this town:

Perhaps the case of John H. Holmes, managing editor of the Herald, and the man who makes that paper what it is, presents as good an example as any of the way a man may rise by a combination of talent and fortuitous circumstances to a commanding position in the newspaper world. Mr. Holmes was born at Peabody, then South Danvers, 46 years ago. He is said to have been a teacher in early life, but there is a good deal of mystery about that period. He drifted to Charlestown, and rose to the position of librarian of the Charlestown public library, before the annexation. While here he used to employ a good deal of the time that he did not occupy in looking after books and intimidating small boys in writing communications and editorials for the Charlestown Chronicle. Finally Holmes, whose passion for newspaper work and newspaperology was uncontrollable, came in practically as editor. Holmes soon had the ambition of his life gratified, and went into daily newspaper work on the Boston Daily Times. Here he had an interest, which proved disastrous to him. The Daily Times, in spite of Mr. Holmes' skilful management and generous expenditure, soon went up the spout. Mr. Holmes was a mighty wielder of the scissors in those days, and has never lost his faith in them. After his rout in the Times, Mr. Holmes found his real opportunity on the Sunday Herald, which he was employed to edit. He built that paper up, and his work gradually extended to the other departments of the paper, though he never knew just what he was in the queer organization of the Herald until, when the paper moved into its new office, he found "Managing editor" painted on the door.

Holmes still preserves, with his long, drooping moustache, his rather long and straight-clipped hair, his bald head and eye glasses, and a somewhat nasal and sententious mode of delivery, somewhat of the aspect of a pedagogue. He is a hard man to reach, but perfectly affable and courteous when he is got at. He likes to talk newspaperology, and is the inventor of the restaurant-bill-of-fare theory of making a newswaper—provide what suits every man's taste; let him pick out what he wants from the bill of fare, and don't expect him to eat everything there is on it. Mr. Holmes is a man of family, lives on Pembroke street and spends his summers at Cohasset. He does not go to the office evenings, but the telephone keeps him always on the qui vive.

The new design for a postal card consists of one piece of engraving instead of two, as on the present card. A head of Jefferson occupies a central place on the upper third of the card. Over this head, in light letters, are the words, "United States." In panels, supported by scroll work at the left and right, are the words, "postal card," in distinct letters. Under the head are the words, "one cent," and beneath the border line inclosing the designation of value is the line, "Nothing but the address to be on this side." The design is graceful and light, and its advantage over the old one is that the idea of putting the stamp off at one side and the designation of the article at the opposite side is abandoned to secure an inclusive design with the strongest feature of it in the center. The new card may also be printed in black ink on white paper. As there is a stock of about 12,000,000 postal cards now on hand it is probable that the new cards will not be out for a month or two.

The battle of the weeds that is now being so fiercely waged in garden and field with the farm laborers, is believed to be the last desperate struggle of the season. The recent rains appear to have given them fresh courage, and those who had clean fields in time of drouth suddenly find themselves surrounded by the enemy, with no way of escape but by cutting the way through. Some who have gone off summering, thinking that all is well, will very likely find a week or two hence that their crops are past redemption for this year. There is a day of grace even for vegetables, and that once lost is lost till another season comes round.

SPECIAL TOWN MEETING.

The town meeting which was called for last Monday evening, came promptly to order at 7 o'clock, when the warrant was read by Town Clerk Poor. Amos Merrill was chosen moderator and officer Goodwin despatched to Mr. Merrill's house returning with the information that Mr. Merrill was not well and must decline. Mr. Farnham was then chosen, and declined, and Sidney C. Bancroft was elected.

The first business was the choice of a selectman to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Levi Preston. The voting was proceeded with, the polls being open until 8.45, when they were closed and the ballot counted. There were three candidates in the field: Rev. Mr. Spaulding, D. P. Grosvenor and Charles H. Goulding. The result was as follows:

Whole number of votes	449
Richard Lyons	1
Charles H. Goulding	64
Daniel P. Grosvenor	152
Rev. Willard Spaulding	232

The latter gentleman was declared elected, amidst prolonged cheering. The consideration of Article 3d was then proceeded with.

"To see if the town will enact a code of by-laws for the government of the Trustees of West Peabody cemetery, and empower the present board to act under it, until their successors shall be chosen at the next annual town meeting, or take any other action concerning the same; agreeably to the petition of W. Spaulding and others.

Mr. Spaulding offered a resolution to the effect that the By-laws concerning Cedar Grove Cemetery be extended to the Trustees of Oak Grove Cemetery as far as they are applicable, and the present trustees empowered to act under them until their successors shall be chosen at the next annual meeting. It was explained that the trustees simply desired the power to sell lots, which they did not have at the present time. The resolution was adopted.

Article 4. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending the high service water from Aborn street to Maple hill; agreeably to the petition of Timothy O'Keefe and others.

Mr. Spaulding said that Mr. O'Keefe lives on Maple Hill, the distance from Aborn street being about 400 feet to his residence. He keeps three horses and several cows. There is no well of water on his premises nor can he obtain any without great expense. He gets his supply from the roofs of buildings which is hardly suited for culinary purposes. It can readily be seen that the family, with horses and a barn, need a good deal of water, which has to be drawn up in a cart. This is his condition. It would cost $500 to lay a pipe to his place—it is a ledge in some parts,— and it might cost more. The income from the supply would be $17.00 a year at the present rates. The place would be worth $100 more than it is at the present time. The income of the water works is now $6,000 above the running expenses. Are not the voters willing to take $3.00 which it will cost over the income from the surplus, and help the poor man along. A rule has been established to lay water pipes wherever the income would pay 4 per cent. But is this a rule never to be broken? For the first year the water works did not pay the interest. But on the whole they have paid excellently. They have paid some 28,000 over the running expenses. This was all he had to say except to remind the town that they expended one or two thousand dollars for a supply pipe to Mr. Roger's place, and the income was paid to Danvers. They brought the water to his house and barn and even furnished a stand pipe several feet high.

Mr. King at this point said it was getting late and he thought some other time than the dead hours of the night should be taken to vote away money by the town. He moved to adjourn until next Monday evening at 7 o'clock. His motion was lost, and Mr. Spaulding moved that the water board be instructed to extend the pipes to Mr. O'Keefe's residence and stable, at a cost not exceeding $700.

S. F. Blaney said that the gentleman had stated the case with such apparent fairness that it made his position very unpleasant. Under any ordinary circumstances he should lack confidence to follow the intellectual giant who had preceeded him. He hoped the citizens would not be governed by enthusiasm in the matter but by the dictates of reason. When the speaker saw the reverend gentleman taking the stand he does, knowing all the facts as he must know them, there must be some reason for it. The speaker had not the slightest personal feeling in the matter. He was the servant of the town. There was no person who stood as the reverend gentleman had pictured, if it was true, but that the speaker would take the last cent he had to help him. Let us analyize this case. A precedent would be established in voting the appropriation asked for. We would carry the water not alone to Mr. O'Keefe. It was not a public street. The gentleman said Mr. O'Keefe could not get water. He could get water just as the speaker got it when it was carried by his house; just as every citizen could get it. After the matter had been discussed in the last meeting he (Mr. Blaney) went to Mr. O'Keefe, to see if some arrangement could not be made. He was insulted to his face. He was told by Mr. O'Keefe that he did not wish him to speak to him. But the speaker could bear all this as long as he was doing his duty. Mr. O'Keefe's house is situated in a private way, and on a ledge. He asked the town to bring the water up this lane, for which he would render to the town no reasonable compensation. Mr. O'Keefe could have the service just where he wished and when, by laying a pipe from the direct main. The speaker after the last town meeting interested the Board and the Board of Health in the matter and they went up to look at his place for the second and third time. They ascertained that a lady on the same street would sell for a nominal sum the privilege of laying the pipes through her land, and Mr. O'Keefe could take the water from that main, and carry it at his own expense to his house. It is simply a matter, in which the town would do injustice to itself. It would open the doors to increasing expense. It carries the water but does not pay expenses. In regard to the case of Mr. Rogers, mentioned by Mr. Spaulding, the speaker had a record on the floor of the old town house against the extension. But in that case there was the consistency of a necessity and convenience. They established a cistern for fire purposes. It was on a public street, and when the pipes arrived at Mr. Rogers' he did not ask the town to carry the water to his own house but paid the expense. If the motion is carried the town opens the doors to a larger expenditure in the future.

Mr. Spaulding said it was true Mr. O'Keefe lives on a private way. But it would soon become a public way. It was true he could bring water to his house but at a large expense. Shall we ask the man to carry his water up hill, when by taking $3.00 from the surplus the town could do it. He believed the citizens would make the case their own.

Mr. Blaney hoped the town would adhere to reason. If they did these things they would soon see what the income of the water works would be. It needed no prophet to tell the town that there was an opportunity of spending $100,000 and more upon the public ways to extend the water—and in just these private schemes. He had hoped that this year, the last in which the speaker expected to serve the town as their water Superintendent, action would be taken to reduce the water rates. He was in hopes that he should induce the Board to reduce the rates per family from $6.00 to $5.00. If the town continued in the way proposed by Mr. Spaulding, they would not be able to do this. He appealed to the citizens to vote it down. The motion of Mr. Spaulding's was lost 76 to 107.

Article 6. To see whether the town will appropriate a sufficient sum of money to build and grade a sidewalk on the northerly side of Lynn street, from County street to the residence of David M. Newhall; agreeably to the petition of I. H. Beede and others.

J. B. Newhall said the distance was about 700 feet, and he thought it would take about $150 to complete the job. He moved that sum be appropriated.

S. A. Southwick had caused an estimate to be made; $60 will do it, and he moved the substitution of that amount. This was not carried, and $150 was appropriated, by a vote of 107 in the affirmative.

Mr. Spaulding moved the indefinite postponement of the article regarding precinct voting, which was carried.

On motion of Mr. Newhall, it was voted that the Forest Firewards and their assistants be paid 30 cts. an hour in the day and 40 cts in the night for putting out fires.

The article regarding the extension of the Water pipes to Gardner's farmhouse was indefinitely postponed and the meeting adjourned.

NOTES OF THE AFFRAY.

The meeting Monday night showed that the money spent in trying to ventilate the small hall was wasted. The air was fearful foul.

It is supposed that Rev. was put on the ballots for Mr. Spaulding for selectman so there would be no mistake.

It didn't take long to settle the precinct voting article. Its enemies like Mr. O'Keefe had depended on Mr. Spaulding and that gentleman was "thar."

The prominent members of the L. & O. League were conspicuous for their absence.

Mr. Spaulding recently remarked that it made him dizzy when he thought of the many offices held by Mr. Poor If he accepts many more it may have the same effect on the rest of us.

Mr. Grosvenor's voters, who had been seen, stood by their candidate nobly.

Many of Mr. Goulding's friends were compelled to desert him at the last minute, by a combination of circumstances.

West Peabody did not turn out in very large numbers, but those who were there voted for their favorite.

Mr. S. F. Blaney never did better in his life. He had the right on his side and came off victorious.

One manufacturer said he was much pleased at the election of Mr. Spaulding, although he didn't vote for him. He said the reason was that he had been trying to get rid of the "old board" for several years, and he hoped they would get so disgusted with Mr. Spaulding, they would not come up smiling for a re-election next Spring.

The vote of Mr. Spaulding was larger than the combined vote of Messrs. Goulding and Grosvenor. Even had it been possible at a late hour to have united on one name, he could not have been defeated.

The story was in circulation in South Peabody, Monday afternoon, that Goulding would not run, and many of his friends there did not come down. Many, too, believed the falsehood that he was a Knight of Labor, even after it had been officially denied.

Mechanic Hall is receiving its yearly touching-up. The carpet has been taken up and will be replaced by a new one, the numbers will be retacked on the backs of the seats, which will be appreciated by those persons who have had sad experience from their sharp edges last season, the floor will receive a thorough sweeping, and a coat of kalsomine is in the course of being applied to the walls. It has been decided that further improvements than these are "inexpedient."—Salem Observer.

How about the carpet on the stage? Will that receive a cleaning and shaking? We are afraid this, also, will come under the head of inexpedient.

The Salem and Danvers railroad is making a mistake in not running all their cars to Andover bridge. We have heard of several people riding up Central street recently, who were compelled to get out before reaching their destination by being told that "the car goes no further." We cannot think the officers of the road mean to incommode our citizens, and it is possible the cars are run in this manner without their knowledge or consent. In either case the mistake should be corrected.

The help at Colburn, Fuller & Co.'s in the cutting, finishing and bottoming rooms had an enforced vacation last Friday and Saturday, by the breaking of the heel compressor, and on Friday many went to the town park to witness the ball game between the cutters and finishers. This was the most amusing game played on the park this season, and the antics of the players repeatedly threw the spectators into spasms of laughter.—Milford Journal.

The special advantages of the Byrant & Stratton Commercial School are admirably set forth in the announcement of its reopening, which will be found in another column. The Principal, Mr. H. E. Hibbard, has been eminently successful in sending out a large number of well equipped, and self reliant pupils who are filling responsible positions, to which he has introduced them, in all our large cities.

As we intimated to our readers several weeks since the Empire State is to return to Boston harbor, where she will be greeted by hosts of friends. She has left Baltimore for Providence, from which place she will make excursions to different points this week; and will follow the yachts in their course at the great race off Newport. After the races she will return to Boston and resume her trips along the North Shore and to Provincetown.

CHARGED WITH ARSON.

The report that Mr. Othernial Ferrin, a well-known citizen and member of the police force, had been arrested at the factory of Dean & Blake yesterday afternoon by District Officer Shaw, created a sensation. At the same time a Mr. Hussy who had been employed by Mr. Ferrin as engineer was arrested at S. B. Winn's. Both men were charged with setting fire to Mr. Ferrin's shop at Danversport on the evening of June 1.

The case was called before Judge Holden in Salem this morning, and Ferrin was defended by H. P. Moulton and the government was represented by D. N. Crowley.

The government wanted the case continued as Mr. O. B. Chadwick, the principal witness, had left town early this morning and could not be found.

Mr. Moulton said the defence was willing to admit that there was an insurance of $800 on the machinery and tools, but not any on the stock, and therefore there was no reason for postponement.

Ira Story of Danvers, the first witness, said he was the owner of the building situated on Harbor street, and that he let it to Ferrin. The fire occured June first, and he was away at the time. He said that he used a part of it for a carpenter shop, but had done no regular business there. For a year did not know just what business Ferrin was doing, but thought he was experimenting in the finishing of skins.

Henry L. Elliott saw the fire about 6.15 on the evening of June 1. He was at work a short distance away. The smoke was coming from the boiler room; he took a key and opened the door, but could not enter on account of the smoke. He gave the alarm and the Department responded. Hadn't seen any one about the premises. He made an examination the next morning and found the room where the skins were badly burned in several places also a fire under the stairs. Saw substance on the walls that looked as if it was poured on. Saw Ferrin visit the place in company with a friend about 10 o'clock that night.

Olando Hatch, one of the engineers, said he reached the fire at 6.20. He went into the basement and saw the fire under the stairs; did not attempt to put it out, but tried to put out the fire in the room above with the aid of the hose company which had arrived. The fire was burning in two directions on the partition and ceiling.

Geo. Weston saw the fire at 6.25 coming out near the chimney. His testimony was the same as the others. He remained about the premises all night. Saw an oil can with the stopple out; there was also a lot of stuffing oil near the skins.

The whole case rested on the testimony District Officer Shaw, who testified that he went there June 2d. Examined the boards about the boiler, but saw no indication of fire. I thoroughly examined the room. There was no indications of fire back of the benches, but there was near the chimney. Back of the chimney was what looked like a quantity of cotton waste. The fire seemed to be above the benches and skins; between the latter were two cans of oil. The skins were spread out in one pile, the upper ones being curled up by the heat and they looked as if the edges had been turned up together and between the skins there was oil in such quantities that it could be scraped up with the finger. In the centre of one pile was found a towel saturated with oil and in the centre of the towel was found a stopple which fitted the oil can that was spoken of by another witness. Another bunch of skins were thrown edges together. Mr. Ferrin came in and I asked him when he left the building. He said quarter of six, and that Hussy left with him. There was no towel in the shop to his knowledge. I said "What would you say if one was found covered with oil and this stopple in the middle of a pile of skins. Ferrin, this looks bad for you." He said he thought it did, but he was not guilty of any crime. I asked if he had any insurance, and he said, "No, this is a dead loss to me."

I went to Hussy; he said he and Ferrin left at quarter of six. Said he had a towel in the shop and he left it back of the benches; he thought Ferrin knew he had one. I showed it to him, but he would not say positively it was his; he thought Ferrin had used the towel that afternoon. I asked Mr. Ferrin about the skins, and he described their position about as I found them, but Mr. Hussy said they were all laying flat.

This closed the evidence, and Mr. Moulton asked for the discharge of his clients, as there was no evidence to hold them. All the evidence put in had been collected two months ago by Officer Shaw, who had since been trying to get enough to make a case, but could not find any. There is no evidence that it was an incendiary fire and none in the least connecting these men with it. He then reviewed the evidence and tried to show that no crime had been committed by the defendants.

Mr. Crowley said they did not ask this court to decide the guilt of the parties, the only question was whether there was evidence sufficient to hold them for the decision of the higher tribunal. Mr. Crowley then argued that there was, as Ferrin had an insurance on the machinery and if the shop had burned he would have been the gainer.

Judge Holden said that from the evidence he was not prepared to say that both were entirely innocent, but so far as Hussy was concerned he had no motive for committing the deed, while in the case of Ferrin there was, and he would discharge Hussy and hold Ferrin in the sum of $1500 for the higher court. James P. King and H. A. Southwick were his bondsmen.

CRIMES AND MISHAPS.

A prize fight is said to have taken place last Sunday afternoon upon which quite a sum of money changed hands. Six rounds were required to settle the combat. Both are were young men who think they are tough.

A young son of Chas. Farrin killed a black snake in the shubbery above Endicott street last Thursday, which measured nearly five feet in length.

A horse attached to a farm wagon, belonging to Simon P. Buxton, ran away in the fields near the River last Thursday and jumped over several stone walls, breaking the wagon and doing other injury.

Cornelius Connell employed at the Bleachery lost the end of his finger last Friday in a part of the machinery. Dr. Pike dressed the wound.

A little child belonging to John Holloran was run over by Edson & Co.'s team last Friday, and sustained injuries to its lower limbs.

A lady dropped a bustle in front of the railroad station last Thursday. She was notified of her loss by several gentlemen who were sitting on the curbstone, but she would not stop for the article of female adornment.

W. S. Sheehan, the well known short stop of the Peabody ball club, hurt one of his legs severely while sliding to a base, in the Peabody-Danvers game last Saturday.

Mr. John Ryan met with a painful accident last Saturday. He was unharnessing a horse at his residence when the animal caught his wrist between his teeth and bit him seriously.

About three weeks ago Mr. C. H. Goulding's horse caught his foot in crossing the railroad track and has since been unable to use it.

A span of ponies from Swampscott and driven by a boy about 15 years old ran away on Washington street last Saturday. They started from near the Bleachery, but the plucky little driver held them in the road, and when opposite Aborn street they stopped so suddenly that he was thrown out. No damage.

Although diligent search has been made by the police no clue has been obtained of the unfinished leather stolen from Wiley & Poor last week. What the object was in taking leather in such an unfinished condition is hard to determine. It was very easy to trace wagon wheels on the dry tan. The place has since been fenced in.

Word was recently received that Henry Jermyn, who returned to Ireland from this town, was out in the woods with a party of friends, and in climbing among the rocks a revolver dropped from his pocket and was discharged, the ball entering his left leg.

There was a slight explosion in one of our blacksmith shops the other day. A stranger, of the pedestrian kind wandered into the shop and stepping to the bellows for the purpose of lighting his pipe, proceeded at his task. He reached down with the pipe in his mouth and gave the bellows a vigorous pump. A moment later the wild cries of the tramp might have been heard half a mile away, and for a half hour he lingered in the vicinity and picked the cinders out of his eyes.

There was an attempt at burglary one night last week at the house of Moses Page on Central street. The burglars became frighened and ran away.

A case of scarlet fever is reported at No. 44 Midway street.

The report of Chief Peasley for the month ending Aug. 1st is as follows: Whole number of arrests, 23; drunk, 13; assault, 4; using profane language, 1; keeping liquor with intent to sell, 1; cruelty to animals, 1; intimidation, 1; keeping unlicensed dog, 1; tramps, 7.

Officers Ruth & Grady arrested Thomas Gannon and William Murphy Monday morning for breaking and entering the house of James Barry on Tremont street on Sunday and stealing $95. The boys made a confession and in the police court they were held in $1,000 each for the higher court.

OUR GREAT SALE

PROVES TO BE

A Triumphant Success!

Hundreds of customers at the counters before the usual morning displays had been arranged. Departments crowded all day and the store closed twenty minutes before the last customer went out!

A CARD.

The importance and magnitude of our great purchase and sale of a surplus wholesale stock in these times of depression in business must be so apparent to every one, that it is almost needless to call attention to it. It is impossible to convey in a few words any description of the stock, but it is undoubtedly the best value and in the best condition of any stock ever offered in this manner. The lots are large, very large, but experience has taught us that no matter how big the purchase, it can easily be sold, provided the goods are of the PRESENT SEASON'S MANUFACTURE AND IMPORTATION, AND THE PRICES ARE LOW ENOUGH. The work necessary to take our semi-annual inventory on Friday and then be ready for this sale on Monday was great, very great, but it was all accomplished in the most satisfactory manner. Our shelves and counters, were so full of goods as to be impossible to find room for all the goods at once, hence we could only open a part at a tfme. This lot sold, more will be added each day. The following among other comments will convey some idea of the sale to those who were not able to attend yesterday:

"I have seen many bargain sales, but this is the only REAL ONE I ever saw. It is all Bargains."

"A big crowd and a nice class of people!'

"People waiting to get at the counters!"

"Never saw such a big crowd!"

"Everybody pleased!"

"Prices are fearfully low!"

"The Bargains are even more than advertised!"

Only a week ago they asked me $3.48 for this wrap and I have just bought it for $1.98"; etc., etc., etc.

Everybody in Essex County knows that what any dealer dares to do, we'll do. Come and see how we do it.

USE

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

It is a medicinal preparation, and, at the same time, an elegant and cleanly toilet article. Its action upon the scalp is healthful. It nourishes the glands which support the hair, and causes thin, dry hair to become thick, soft, and vigorous. It restores the color of youth to locks which have become faded with age or disease; and relieves and cures itching, caused by humors of the scalp. Dr. George Gray, Nashua, N. H., writes: "It gives me pleasure to testify to the wonderful effects produced by Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, as observed by me in very many cases. IT WILL CERTAINLY RESTORE THE HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR. It cleanses the head of dandruff, and leaves the hair soft, glossy, and beautiful." F. T. Sandhein, 1010 Spruce st., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "After unavailingly trying a number of preparations to prevent my hair from falling out, and, realizing that I was fast becoming bald, I tried, as a last resort, Hall's Hair Renewer. I have used only four bottles of the Renewer, and am perfectly satisfied that it is the best preparation in the market for checking the falling out of hair, invigorating the hair roots, and promoting a new growth."

RICHARD K. FOX,

FRANKLIN SQUARE, N. Y.

The August Wide Awake may be described as a "flower number," since there are eight flower poems in it, exquisitely illustrated, celebrating fancifully the dandelions, the fleur-de-lis, the sweet brier, the white daffodil, the four-leafed clover, the mignonette, the water-lily and the tulip. The ballad of the number is Sir Walter's Honor. The opening story is a very strong one, Peter-Patrick. A humorous paper, An Entertainment of Mysteries leaves the readers to guess the solutions. In the Canon of the Tennessee, is a true and intensely interesting mountain story of a brave boy's adventure. Some Indian Children, gives many interesting particulars of the home life of some of the Indian children previous to their arrival at Hampton and Carlisle. Some Nantucket Children, chapter two, relates some amusing experiences of the off-islanders with the young Nantucket venders of Nantucket commodities.

Whitewash, copperas, lime and chloride of potash are all good disinfectants, and if liberally applied and used by our citizens, we need have no fear of cholera, if it does come to our side of the Atlantic. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

A LAKE OF FIRE.

The author of "In Sunny Lands" thus describes a singular lake on the island of New Providence, near the city of Nassau:

We went down the front steps, picking up a lighted lantern on the way, went through the flower-garden over a walk paved with blue and white tiles, and carefully made our way over to the boat-house, about fifty yards away. It was one of the darkest nights I ever saw, and without the lantern we must certainly have broken our necks. We went into the boat-house, a large stone building, and pushed out a heavy row-boat. Leaving the lantern behind we stepped into the boat; I took the oars and we pulled off. The first stroke gave me a fine start. There had not been any unusual appearance of phosphorescence on the surface of the water, more than is often seen on tropical seas.

But as soon as the oars stirred it up, they seemed to be dipped in melted gold. There was actually fire there, I was compelled to think. While I was wondering at it a fish startled by our splatter, darted across the pond near the surface, and in its trail was left a streak of yellow fire. Then we saw at different places on the surface little vapory clouds of fire flashing and darting about like the northern lights.

"If you have a newspaper in your pocket," said Mr. Darling, "lay it on your lap and splash the water with both oars, to see whether you can get light enough to read by."

I did so and was able to read the heading and all the large lines without difficulty. I took an oar then and splashed the water, and wherever a drop fell back into the lake was a round spot of fire. I began to feel a little solemn. There was something startling in seeing so much fire floating about. And I had not the faintest notion where we were. I had gone out upon an unknown lake in total darkness, and had no idea how large nor how deep it was, nor where the current, if there was any, would carry us. The lights of the house were visible, but that was the only landmark.

"If you pull hard and watch the bow and stern of the boat," said Mr. Darling, "you will see something curious."

I did so, and was well paid for the exertion. When a boat moves fast there is always a cutting of the water at the bow, and a little eddy left just behind the stern. That cutwater and that eddy were of flaming fire. More fish darted about, leaving fiery trails. Indeed, wherever the water was agitated it turned apparently into fire. When the agitation ceased the fire disappeared, except that there was always a little sparkling upon the surface. We splashed, rowed and watched. One of the most curious effects was to throw something from the boat to a distant part of the lake and watch the fire splash. A fountain put in the centre of the lake would be a fountain of fire. We measured the depth with an oar and found it to be four or five feet. The lake is nearly one thousand feet long and from two hundred to three hundred feet broad.

As we floated around on its surface of ebony and fire, Mr. Darling told me its history. It is an artificial lake, Mr. Williams, the former proprietor of Waterloo, having built it to store green turtles in—from which I conclude that Mr. Williams thought as much of a good dinner as he did of a fine house. The plan was to buy the turtles alive and put them in the lake and let them increase in size and numbers, when they would always be ready to be caught and eaten. Millions of fish could be kept in the lake at the same time, and thus the occupant of Waterloo would always have a good dinner waiting in the yard. The lake's bed is cut out of the solid rock, and is only a few hundred feet from the ocean. It is connected with the sea by a small canal, also cut through the rock; and when the gate in this canal is left open, the tide rises and falls in the lake. It is mentioned of a curious circumstance that the water in the lake can be changed as often as desired without destroying its phosphorescence. Various analyses of the water have been made, but without any great results.

WOODBURY'S ANTIDOTE,

To restore lost appetite, is the next thing to air or an ocean voyage. Druggists sell it.

Ayer's CherryPectoral

Should be kept constantly at hand, for use in emergencies of the household. Many a mother, startled in the night by the ominous sounds of Croup, finds the little sufferer, with red and swollen face, gasping for air. In such cases Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is invaluable. Mrs. Emma Gedney, 159 West 128 st., New York, writes: "While in the country, last winter, my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with Croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was tried in small and frequent doses, and, in less than half an hour, the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Pectoral saved my darling's life." Mrs. Chas. B. Landon, Guilford, Conn., writes: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Saved My Life,

and also the life of my little son. As he is troubled with Croup, I dare not be without this remedy in the house." Mrs. J. Gregg, Lowell, Mass., writes: "My children have repeatedly taken Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for Coughs and Croup. It gives immediate relief, followed by cure." Mrs. Mary E. Evans, Scranton, Pa., writes: "I have two little boys, both of whom have been, from infancy, subject to violent attacks of Croup. About six months ago we began using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it acts like a charm. In a few minutes after the child takes it, he breathes easily and rests well. Every mother ought to know what a blessing I have found in Ayer's Cherry Pectoral." Mrs. Wm. C. Reid, Freehold, N. J., writes: "In our family, Ayer's medicines have been blessings for many years. In cases of Colds and Coughs, we take

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

and the inconvenience is soon forgotten."

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER,

252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made, We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bosuley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated courtesy whether anything is desired or not.

A PARISIAN SALON.

Madame Mohl's saloon stood out in strong relief, with a character entirely its own. It was a permanent protest against the spirit and tendency of the day; against pretension, purse-pride, and vulgarity in every form. While it was being loudly proclaimed by high and low that luxury had rendered quiet sociability impossible, that the pleasures of conversation were a thing of the past, unless you could "entertain" in the modern sense of the word, as one would come to you, this old woman without rank or fortune, living in high-perched, shabbily-furnished rooms, without suppers or chandeliers, enjoyed a position unrivalled in its way, and contrived to attract to her house all that was best worth having in Paris. By the sole magnet of her esprit she drew around her the most remarkable personalities, not only of France, but of the world. Celebrities from every capital in Europe gave one another rendezvous at Madame Mohl's Friday evenings and Wednesday afternoons. And strangers, who, hearing of this salon, had been at pains to get an introduction there, and sometimes taken by surprise when they entered it for the first time. They found a few quiet people, chiefly gentlemen, and most of them elderly, "making conversation" by the light of a couple of lamps, which modest illumination was dimmed by green shades for M. Mohl's eyes. The one luxury of the room was a great many very comfortable armchairs of all shapes and sizes. It was a notion of Madame Mohl's that people could not talk their best unless they were comfortably seated. "I like my friends to be snug when they are talking," she would explain, if she noticed a curious glance wandering over the motely gathering of fauteuils. * * * Her contemporary, Madame Swetchine, had some good talk in her drawing-room, and only discovered a few days before her death that she had made her friends "do penance," as she sweetly said in apologizing for it, on hard chairs for thirty years.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Alexander Hamilton, when Secretary of the Treasury, had an indiscreet flirtation with the wife of one of his clerks, who successfully blackmailed him. His political opponents heard of it and started a rumor that he was speculating in stocks through the clerk.

When this came to Hamilton's ears, he published an account of the whole transaction in a pamphlet, admitting that he had been the dupe of a designing woman and her rascally husband, but denying that, while Secretary of the Treasury, he had speculated in stocks, basing his operations on his inside knowledge of government finances. In an appendix he published the letters of his fair friend, leaving uncorrected her queer blunders in spelling; as, for example, when she wrote that she hoped soon "to see her dear Col. harmilton, she is alone, and begs he will rite to her whos greatest fault Is Lovin' him, and clear up her doubts."

The publication of this pamphlet gave Mrs. Hamilton great sorrow, and when she came to Washington to live in her old age, she had purchased a considerable portion of the edition from second-hand book-sellers, paying them a dollar for each copy. All at once she began to receive a dozen or even more every week, and it leaked out that a New York book-monger had caused the reprinting of the pamphlet, thus receiving a dollar for what had cost him eight or ten cents. There is a copy of the original pamphlet in the Congressional Library at Washington.

CULTIVATING PEANUTS.

If any of our readers desire to indulge in growing their own peanuts, they can do so by giving to any dry soil a thorough pulverization and fertilization with decomposed stable manure. Let the surface be even, and plant about the time of planting beans, getting fresh and unbaked nuts, which should be removed from the shell. Plant in hills from two-and-one-half to three feet apart, two kernels in each hill, so as to insure at least one plant to every hill. The surplus can be transplanted. When they come up keep clean by hoeing. This is fully as necessary as with other crops. When they begin to run and show blossoms the vines should be covered with earth, blossoms and all, to a depth of about an inch, leaving the ends of the vines just out of the ground. With good cultivation the vines will grow rapidly and the earthing operation continued. They will continue to grow until frost comes, and then, as soon as the leaves are touched, they should be lifted from the ground, leaving the nuts clinging to the vines, in which condition they must be thoroughly dried, seeing to it that they do not mould or are destroyed by rats or mice. With good culture and luck a quart may be gathered from a single plant; so if the farmers' boys wish to grow their own, either for use or a few hills as a curiosity, there is no great difficulty attending the operation.

The only cough mixture before the people that contains no opiates or narcotics is Red Star Cough Cure. Price, twenty-five cents.

The enormous buttons worn by the young ladies can be made useful. When the sweet creatures attend picnics they may use them as plates.

SPARKS.

As was stated in this column just after the official test of the electric fire alarm, that the best time to criticise the working of the alarm was after it had had a practical test, so it has proven. The alarm was given just such a test early Sunday morning, and has proven just what its friends claimed for it; that it was the best system in use and would do its work thoroughly. At 1.10 o'clock Sunday morning, Officer Jones pulled in an alarm from box 17 for a fire in the large barn at the residence of Henry Gardner on Margin street. The light of this fire was seen a little before 1 o'clock by officers Barnaby and Jones who were standing on the Square. Not knowing whether it was in town or not they started to investigate, officer Jones going as far as the corner of Northend street and Love Lane, before he could locate it, and thinking that box 17 was nearer for him than box 19, and that the first named box would be directly in the line of the apparatus, he pulled in that box, and in less time than it takes to tell it, the big whistle was roaring out the number of the box and the bell striker was adding its deep tones to the alarm, bringing the sleeping firemen from their beds with a celerity never before equalled in this town, as every man knew that it meant business. The apparatus was prompt in response, the machine from the Central station passing Elm street, going up Central, before the last round was done striking. Hose 1 was the first at the hydrant at the foot of Gardner street, on Liberty street, and ran out what hose was on the carriage. Hose 3 came next and pieced out the line, and then came the jumper of Steamer 2, and the carriage of Hose 4, making a direct line of 3000 feet which reached the fire. The water from the hydrant would not run through the long line, and it was then attached to Steamer 2 which was soon sending a good stream on the building but not in time to save it, as it was completely in flames when discovered, but attention was given to the surrounding buildings. The firemen were at work on the fire until 4 o'clock, and it was 6 o'clock before they were ready for the next alarm. The building burned was a very large one, and contained 7 tons of English hay, carriages and wagons, a driving horse valued at $250, two pigs, a number of sets of harness, tools, etc., all of which were burned. There is no doubt whatever that the fire was the work of an incendiary who did his devilish work in a most thorough manner.

Mr. Gardner was awakened by the flashing of the fire which shone into his sleeping room, and thinking that the ell of the house was on fire, he roused the other inmates, who rushed out in a half dressed condition. His son was the first one out, having nothing on besides his night clothes but his jacket and hat. When he went into the yard he found two men there, both of whom he said were intoxicated. They made the remark to him "your barn is on fire." The boy then told them to go and give the alarm in town, but it seems that they did not. The boy then ran to the farm house several hundred feet away and alarmed the foreman Andrew J. Hayes, who with other employes of the place went on to the roof of the house and kept it wet down until the firemen arrived. Stephen Kelley, living at the house, ran out to try and save the horse, when the fire was first discovered, but when he opened the door the flames burst forth with such fury that it was impossible to go further. The loss is estimated at about $2000, with an insurance of about $500. Had the alarm been given from box 19 the fire could have been readily reached from the hydrant at the corner of Holly and Northend street by over 1000 feet less hose, but as it was nothing could have saved the barn or its contents, the fire had obtained such headway before discovery. Hose 2 and 5 were on the spot, but did not lay any hose. The alarm was taken up in Danvers and several carriages went as far as the Peabody line. Chief Buxton was on the spot with the first piece of apparatus. Chief Hadley of Salem was also present. A collation was furnished at the Central Station when the tired firemen returned. The alarm was the best ever given in town even under the old system, and the attendance by the firemen was better than the average. The two men who were seen by the Gardner boy, said that they were sitting on the log at the Andover street pump when the fire broke out and ran over to see what it was, not thinking to give an alarm. Large crowds visited the scene Sunday, and three policemen were required to protect the fruit on the place from the hoodlums. A detail from Hose 3 were sent over Sunday to pull over the ruins. Hose 4, being the last company to piece out the line of hose, held the pipe.

Driver Tanch is taking his vacation this week, and George H. Fairbrother is driving the steamer team.

John A. P. Sumner, engineer of Steamer 2, is spending the week in Moultonboro, N. H.

Steward Noel E. DeNot. of Steamer 2, is the proud father of a bouncing 11 pound young fireman, born Thursday night. Noel says that the boy wanted to go to the fire Sunday morning. The genial Steward has been receiving congratulations ever since the event happened.

The Board of Engineers will meet this evening.

In addition to the fire alarm telegraph, the Board of Engineers have given a number to be blown on the whistles at Proctor's shop in case of fire there. It will be four blasts of the whistle, repeated after the style of the fire alarm. This will be their number, and will not be used by any other whistle.

Steamer 2 voted Monday night to take a day's outing on the Empire State some time during the present month. W. F. Munroe was elected a substitute in the company, subject to the approval of the Engineers.

Nathan P. Beckett was elected a member of Steamer 2, at their meeting Monday evening, subject to approval by the Engineers.

Would it not be a good idea for the Engineers or some one, to get out a card with the location of hydrants and reservoirs? It would be very handy for reference in connection with the fire alarm cards issued by O. B. Chadwick & Co.

Messrs. Dole & Osgood have just completed a hook and ladder carriage for the town of Topsfield. The truck is about 20 feet long, with a skeleton body fitted with rolls for about 6 or 8 ladders, the longest of which is about 25 feet. There is one extension ladder to be operated with a rope, which will run about 35 feet, and there are three roof ladders. The top of the body is slatted to carry canvasses. A large box hangs between the forward and hind wheels for the accommodation of about three dozen buckets. In addition there are the usual tools, hooks, pike poles, axes, saws, etc. The truck is painted red with black and white trimmings. The box is lettered "Topsfield H. & L." The carriage is fitted to run with a horse or by hand. It is a fine piece of work and just the thing for a small country town, as it is very light, and can be easily taken over the rough roads. It will be delivered this week.

The Empire State will resume her excursion trips in Boston Harbor this week, and the members of Steamer 2, are getting ready to spend one day on the boat.

ASBURY GROVE.

Last week I spoke of the social life here and how time is passed in pursuing many pleasures. This week there has been nothing of a startling nature and one can hardly find material for a short letter. There is among us a large number of female school teachers, no less than eight being quartered in one cottage. They as well as others are frequently seen leaving the grounds at an early hour in the morning bound for the berry pastures in the vicinity of the grove. The ladies armed with tin pails and baskets march through the avenues, their beauty disguised by plain dresses and rustic-looking sunbonnets from which can be obtained an occasional peep of a sparkling eye. They seem bent on a days enjoyment and after several hours in the pastures and the partaking of a lunch with which they had provided themselves they return with large quantities of fine fruit and then vie with each other in making berry bread and pies.

Among other interesting events this week was a donation party, the victims being a worthy couple who spend most of the year at the grove. It was an old fashioned donation party, where the whole neighborhood turned out, without regard to sect or religion, and the study seemed to be how little one could carry to the house and how much he could carry away under his vest. Games and music occupied the evening and the company carried away about as much as they brought. It is said that one young fellow brought farm produce and in return took home cake—for the children he said. Those children had a vigorous appetite for cake.

The people here are ready to patronize anything in the shape of an entertainment and last season some very pleasant musicales were given at the chapel. Last Sunday evening a returned missionary from India was announced to give an illustrated lecture at the chapel on that country and long before the hour there were several hundred men, women and children waiting for the doors to open, and before the lecture commenced the building was well filled at ten cents a head. This illustrates what I said that the cottagers were willing to encourage this sort of recreation. The views were poorly mounted but as they represented scenes and incidents that had come under the personal observation of the lecturer it made them more interesting.

The climatic influences tell on us here as well as on the rest of the world. During the warm weather last week, those who had cottages near the entrance of the grove sweltered in the hot sun and "Mother Hubbard" and palm leaf fans made existence bearable. At the other end of the grove things were the opposite, the woods leading from Mudge Avenue were full of cottagers who had taken their hammocks and easy chairs into the shade. And it was cool, too, some of the ladies being obliged to put on a woolen dress in order to keep warm. It seems hardly probable that one would meet with two such extremes so short a distance apart. Sunday is pretty generally observed. Commencing Sunday before last preaching was held at the circle. There is no danger of being crowded and we are pretty sure to hear some minister of note who has only run down for a little Sunday recreation. Last Sunday a large number was present to listen to a young man from Marblehead and enjoy the singing which is always a strong attraction.

If the grounds are attractive during the day they are no less so in the evening, in fact one could hardly imagine that such a transformation could be effected. As soon as it is dark the lamps above the avenues are lit. There are 88 of them and it takes nearly two hours to light them. At the same time many of the cottages are lighted and they make a beautiful appearance as suspended from rafters over head are hanging lamps and Chinese lanterns and from an elevated position the lights wink and blink as if in merriment over the pretty sight of which they form a part. In places the lights stand out in bold relief against the dark background formed by the dense foliage of the surrounding trees, and a stroll at night will well repay one.

There is some talk that the Association will build a hotel on the present site of the farm house, but as this has been talked of for several years and no steps taken probably this will amount to no more than previous ones. But there is one thing that should receive attention at the hands of the Association and that is the necessity of a new restaurant building. The present buildings are not in keeping with the rest of the grounds. They consist of a lot of old shanties that were used as barracks by the soldiers during the war and are in a dilapidated condition and not safe for use. If some philanthropist would burn them down or a cyclone level them to the ground it is probable a creditable building might be erected to take there place, but improvements made by the Association come very slowly and do not keep pace with individual enterprise.

There has nothing been done as yet in regard to petitioning for the horse railroad track inside the grove, and many express the opinion that permission would never be granted, particularly as it is a well known fact that in the first place the Association refused to allow the horse railroad to cross the street to its land and a double track terminus was built, but afterwards they relented and it was carried to its present terminus. The grounds are being put in condition for the coming camp-meeting work.

WELLMAN OSBORNE:

Dear Sir—I have watched with interest the great excitement caused by your Grand- Closing-Out Sale and have decided to allow you fifteen days more in which to follow, to a successful conclusion the remarkable sale so auspiciously begun.

My plans are all perfected and I shall have to commence operations at once, in the rear of the two stores occupied by Mr. Babb and yourself, but I will try to hinder you as little as possible. I am glad that the people have "come to the rescue so nobly" shown by the large crowds, (of which I was a witness,) that surged into your store last Saturday night. It shows that they appreciate the great opportunity you are giving them. I wish you continued success.

C. A. SANGER

7 LOWELL STREET,

UP STAIRS.

Last Saturday's Boston Record contained the following notice of a former resident who has a sister still living in this town:—Among the gentlemen who have come from other branches of trade and gained subsequent distinction as bank presidents I must not overlook Mr. Samuel Carleton, who manages his little bank on the corner of Brattle street and Scollay square and makes it pay 10 per cent dividends regularly, while larger and more ambitious institutions have to be content with 4 or 5 per cent. Indeed the National Security, of which Mr. Carleton is president, and the Maverick, presided over by Mr. Asa P. Potter, and the First National, of which Mr. John Carr is president, are the only banks in Boston which pay 10 per cent dividends. The Bunker Hill bank, in Charlestown, however, pays 9 per cent. Mr. Carleton is a short gentleman, a trifle hard of hearing, but not at all slow in grasping the point of a matter when it once strikes his tympanum. He got his start in the match business as a member of the well known firm of Byam & Carleton.

Mr. Lafreniere, the barber under the hotel, says that he shall not keep his shop open on Sunday if every shop in town opens. When it comes to this: that he must either open Sundays or be obliged from lack of custom on the other six days to leave town, he will do the latter. We think the barbers make a mistake in opening Sundays, and we believe the citizens of the town will sustain Mr. Lafreniere in his efforts to obtain a living by giving him a liberal patronage.

It is decided that the time of holding the Republican State convention will be changed, as the date contemplated is the day of the great parade in Boston of the Odd Fellows, who have already secured the hotel accommodations, making it doubtful if an additional large number would get the attention they might wish. The convention will be held a week later, Sept. 29.

A little child belonging to Dennis Bresnehan had a narrow escape from death Friday. It was at play in the yard and fell head first into a barrel half full of water. Its feet were seen by a neighbor who quickly pulled it out.

Mr. Joseph Ridley a former resident and one who has not sustained an enviable reputation since leaving here has been arrested for defrauding Clinton people by selling rubber stamps, getting his money for them and then never delivering the goods.

Mr. William Scampton of Danvers has been appointed District Deputy Grand Sachem for Masconomo Tribe of Red Men in this town, and Mr. S. S. Littlefield has been re-appointed to a similar position in relation to the Newburyport Tribe.

Mr. Robinson Whitaker has resigned as engineer at Proctor's shop and Mr. James Rodie, for a number of years foreman for Mr. George H. Little, has taken his place. It is reported that Mr. Whitaker will hold a similar position with L. & G. H. Poor.

The occupants of Allen's Block are complaining about a strange Newfoundland that is making himself a nuisance around the place. The dog is not vicious but is old and his fur is matted so that it comes out in bunches. It is not known to whom he belongs.

The conductors' and drivers' supper at the Willows last Wednesday night was a great success, and 172 sat down to enjoy it. The Danvers boys had their car gaily decorated with flags and Chinese lanterns. It was about daylight when the company broke up.

The 14th annual reunion of the Peabody family will be held at North Reading, Tuesday, August 24, when Stephen Peabody, Esq., of Newburyport will make an address. Mr. Peabody, of Stoneham, is the secretary. That should include the whole town of Peabody.

The Danvers Mirror says Frank B. Trask has the refusal of the store now occupied by G. H. Jacobs & Co., the first of March 1887, when the lease of the present lessee, B. E. Newhall, expires. He expects to use it for a storehouse and to display his stock of upholstered goods.

At a meeting of the members of the Essex Agricultural Society residents of Peabody, held in the Selectmen's room at the town hall last evening, Lyman Osborne was chosen Chairman and A. C. Osborne secretary. F. H. Appleton Esq. was unanimously re-elected Trustee for the ensuing year.

One of our adopted citizens who has been in this country long enough to know better lost a young pig recently. He paid about four dollars for the animal and thinking to add beauty as well as usefulness to the animal he cut off the curly caudal appendage from which his pigship bled to death. John is a wiser and sadder man.

Never condemn the local paper unless it has dealt with you unjustly. If it has wronged you, go to the editor like a gentleman should, and if you know wherein he has done you an injustice, he will lose no time in telling the public. Don't try to bluff him on the street, for this will only prove you an ass of the first water, and adds fuel to the flames.

Masconomo Tribe of Red Men held a meeting last Thursday evening and Mr. Ezra H. Shannon tendered his resignation as Sachem, being unable to give the office the attention it deserved owing to a press of other business. The vacancy will be filled at the next meeting, which will be on the sleep of the 19th sun Sturgeon Moon 8th run G. S. D. 395.

Miss S. Emma Phillips, for several years employed in the PRESS office, will be united in marriage to-day to Mr. Fred P. Osborn, son of Geo. P. Osborn. The officiating clergyman will be Rev. George Walker of the Episcopal church. We extend our hearty congratulations and trust there are many years of happiness for the newly wedded couple. They will reside at No. 55 Franklin street.

At Asbury Grove a W. C. T. U. delegation propose to "keep open house" at the Peabody tent during the camp meeting. Meetings are to be held at 1 P. M. each day on such lines of work as Sunday School Temperance, Young Woman's Work, Social Purity, Constitutional Prohibition. The W. C. T. U. Evangelistic Work, etc. All will be welcomed by the temperance women.

Conductor C. A. Basford sent last Thursday a pair of his pigeons by Conductor Frank Lewis who was going to Elliott, Me., to that place. Mr. Lewis left Lynn about one o'clock and at night Mr. Basford found that his birds had returned, and with them was another that did not belong to him but had probably fell in with his on the road. The stranger was the same breed and had a ring around one leg with a number and the initials of the owner, but not the town. Another pair were started from Elliott, yesterday morning, and were home before 10.30 o'block A. M.

M. F. Gowen, a young man who came into town last Thursday to look for work, but did not find any because he was too tired to do any if he had, while passing an orchard not a mile from Walnut street, yielded to temptation jumped over a fence and was quietly gorging himself with forbidden fruit in the shape of early pears when he was interrupted in his reflections on the "sin of our first parents" by the appearance of the owner, who gave the young man his choice to either saw a lot of wood for him or be handed over to the police. He was engaged three hours in sawing wood.

Poet's Corner.

Unforgotten.

By Ruthie Turner.

A face comes back to me to-day,
By memory made more fair;
A childish face with laughing eyes
And palest golden hair.
Long years have passed since last I saw
Those eyes of darkest blue;
She finished up her life-work then—
I still have mine to do.

I met her first one Sabbath morn
When Summer's golden light
Lit up the church with beauty rare
And made it wond'rous bright.
She softly stroked her mother's hair
And laughed with childish glee;
Then turning round, with roguish face,
Looked up and smiled on me.

Time passed. I left those quiet scenes
The city's toils to share,
And saw no more that childish face
With sunny floating hair.
When next I sat within that church
A shadow o'er me spread:
No childish face looked up to mine—
My little friend was dead.

Years pass, yet oft there comes to me
A picture bright and fair—
A Summer sky with floating clouds
And pleasant balmy air.
I hear the distant song of birds
From out some forest tree;
I catch a glimpse of laughing eyes
That, turning, smile on me.

I know I never more on earth
May see that childish face;
The snow is drifted o'er her grave—
I could not find the place;
Yet oft I think a childish hand
Is reaching out to me,
A happy face looks up to mine
And bids my sorrow flee.

I know I'll meet her bye and bye,
Where parting comes no more;
It may be I shall clasp her hand
Upon the other shore;
And as we wait for those we love
To step across the line,
Perhaps I'll tell her how her life
Has helped and strengthened mine.

The Song of the Open Car.

Oh, what delight
On a soft summer night
To ride in an open car.
You can stand the expense—
It's only five cents—
No matter how poor you are.

Just five in a seat
Makes the fare complete
When you ride in an open car;
But some people green will stand up between,
And so get un-pop-u-lar.

In the three rear pews
You may smoke, if you choose—
'Tis the rule of the open car;
But you'll hear, I'm afraid,
Some fussy old maid
Say, "Oh, that horrid cigar!"

Better Than Vacation.—This is preeminently the vacation month when thousands seek rest and recreation. But to those who suffer the depressing effects of summer debility, the disagreeable symptoms of scrofula, the tortures of biliousness, dyspepsia or sick headache, there is more pain than pleasure in leaving home. To such we say, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. It will purify your blood, tone up and strengthen your body, expel every trace of scrofula, correct biliousness, and positively cure dyspepsia or sick headache. Take it before you go and you will enjoy your vacation a thousand fold.

In the bright lexicon of modern business men there is no such word as fail. Assignment is the proper term.

Ayer's Ague Cure never fails to cure Fever and Ague, and all malarial disorders. Warranted.

The very warm weather calls for plenty of water, and drinking a large amount of water after filling the stomach with vegetable food ofttimes causes a fermentation and brings on cramps and acute pains. There have been a large number sick with summer complaints in the past two weeks. A very excellent thing to do when thirsty is to squeeze a little lemon juice in the water, as the acid of a lemon is one of the best antiseptic known.

After the most exhaustive practical tests in hospitals and elsewhere, the gold medal and certificate of highest merit were awarded to St. Jacobs Oil, as the best pain-curing remedy, at the Calcutta International Exhibition.

Push! Yes, that is the word, but push what? Everything you undertake. Push the little troubles and perplexities that crowd into your pathway to one side. Push yourself out of despondency and shiftlessness into life and activity. Push everything that is for the best interest of your town—that will in any way help to honorably build it up. Push your hands down into your pockets and give a dollar or two occasionally for charitable purposes. Push! Push! Keep on pushing. That's the way to make things move

HUNTING AN ICTHYOSAURUS.

Bill Nye and Party Were Disappointed in the Game.

SEVERAL years ago I had the pleasure of joining a party about to start out along the banks of Bitter creek on a hunting expedition. The leader of the party was a young man who had recently escaped from college with a large amount of knowledge which he desired to experiment with on the people of the far west. He had heard that there was an icthyosaurus up somewhere along the west side of Bitter creek, and he wanted us to go along and help him to find it.

I had been in the west some eight or nine years then, and I had never seen an icthyosaurus myself, but I thought the young man must know his business, so I got out my Winchester and went along with the group.

We tramped over the pale, ashy, glaring, staring stretch of desolation, through burning, quivering days of monotony and sage-brush and alkali water and aching eyes and parched and bleeding lips and nostrils cut through and eaten by the sharp alkaline air, mentally depressed and physically worn out, but cheered on and braced up by the light and joyous manner of the ever hopeful James Trilobite Eton, of Concord.

James Trilobite Eton, of Concord, never moaned, never gigged back or shed a hot, remorseful tear in this powdery, hungry waste of gray, parched ruin. No regret came forth from his lips in the midst of this mighty cemetery, this ghastly potter's field for all that nature had ever reared that was too poor to bear its own funeral expenses.

Now and then a lean, soiled gray coyote, without sufficient moral courage to look a dead mule in the hind foot, slipped across the horizon like a dirty phantom and faded into the hot and tremulous atmosphere. We scorned such game as that and trudged on, cheered by the hope that seemed to spring eternal in the breast of James Trilobite Eton, of Concord.

Four days we wallowed through the unchanging desolation. Four nights we went through the motions of slumbering on the arid bosom of the wasted earth. On the fifth day James Trilobite Eton said we were now getting near the point where we would find what we sought. On we pressed through the keen, rough blades of the seldom bunch grass, over the shifting, yellow sand and the greenish gray of the bad land soil which never does anything but sit around through the accumulating centuries and hold the world together, a kind of powdery poison that delights to creep into the nostrils of the pilgrim and steal away his brains, or when moistened by a little snow to accumulate around the feet of the pilgrim or on the feet of the pilgrim's mule till he has the most of an unsurveyed "forty" on each foot, and the casual observer is cheered by the novel sight of one homestead striving to jump another.

Toward evening James Trilobite Eton gave a wild shriek of joy and ran to us from the bed of an old creek, where he had found an ichthyosaurus. The animal was dead! Not only that, but it had been dead a long, long time!

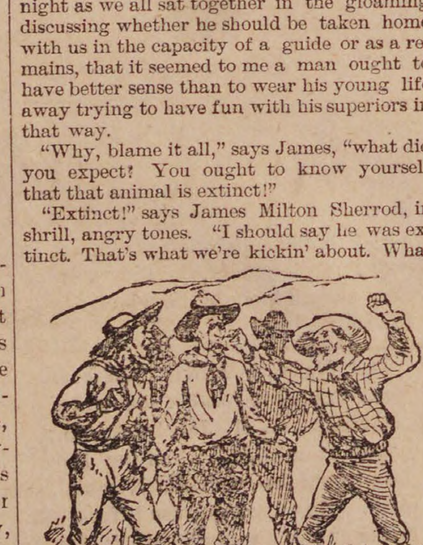
James Milton Sherrod said that "if a college education was of no more use to a man than that, he, for one, allowed that his boy would have to grope through life with an academical education, and very little of it."

I uncocked my gun and went back to camp a sadder and madder man, and, though years have come and gone, I am still irritable when I think of the five days we tramped along Bitter creek searching for an animal that was no longer alive, and our guide knew it before he started.

I ventured to say to J. Trilobite Eton that night as we all sat together in the gloaming discussing whether he should be taken home with us in the capacity of a guide or as a remains, that it seemed to me a man ought to have better sense than to wear his young life away trying to have fun with his superiors in that way.

"Why, blame it all," says James, "what did you expect? You ought to know yourself that that animal is extinct!"

"Extinct!" says James Milton Sherrod, in shrill, angry tones. "I should say he was extinct. That's what we're kickin' about. What galled me was that you should of waited till the old cuss was extinct before you come to us like a man and told us about it. You pull us through the sand for a week and blister our heels and condemb near kill us, and all the time you know that the blame brute is layin' there in the hot sun gittin' more and more extinct every minute. Fun is fun, and I like a little nonsense now and then just as well as you do, but I'll be eternally banished to Bitter creek if I think it's square or right or white to play it on your friends this kind of a way.



That's what we are kicking about.

"You claim that the animal has been dead goin' on 5,000 years, or some such thing as that, and try to get out of it that way, but long as you knew it and we didn't it shows that you're a low cuss not to speak of it.

"What difference does it make to us, I say, whether this brute was or was not dead and swelled up like a pizen'd steer long before Nore got his zoologickle show together? We didn't know it. We haven't seen the Salt Lake papers for weeks. You use your edjecation to fool people with. My opinion is that the day is not far distant when you will wake up and find yourself in the bottom of an untimely grave.

"You bring us 150 miles to look at an old bone pile all tramped into the ground and then say that the animal is extinck. That's a great way to talk to an old man like me, a man old enough to be your grandfather. Probly you cacklate that it is a rare treat for an old-timer like me to waller through from Green river to the Yallerstone and then hear a young kangaroo with a moth-eaten eyebrow under his nose burst forth into a rollicking laugh and say that the animal we've been trailin' for five days is extinck.

"I just want to say to you, James Trilobite Eton, and I say it for your good, and I say it with no prejudice against you, for I want to see you succeed, that if this ever happens agin and you are the party to blame you will wake up with a wild start on the follerin' day and find yourself a good deal extincker than this here old busted lizard is."—Bill Nye in Chicago News.

Ancient Methods of Measuring Time.

No wonder the ancients didn't get along in the world as well as the people of to-day—they lost too much time. And the reason they lost time was because of their imperfect ways of measuring it. They had to depend on the sun dial for the most part. A sun dial might be very useful when there was any sun, but it was entirely useless on cloudy days and during the night. In the latter case the truant husband inclined to hang out late profited much. It might be two o'clock in the morning when he crept in, but he could swear it was only 10, and his poor wife had no way of proving that he was lying. It removes much of the bitterness of a lie when you can't prove it on a fellow.

The Greeks and Romans, of whom we have occasion to speak occasionally, although this is not a strictly classical journal, had an improvement on the sun dial, which they could resort to when the sun dial was on a strike for eight hours as a day's work. It was a large jar filled with water, and a hole was made in the bottom through which the water could escape. The flow of the water told off the hours. It was called the clepsydra, which means "The water steals away."

Sometimes an old Roman who had been drinking a good many Roman punches before going to bed would wake up in the silent watches—we mean sun dials—of the night, parched with thirst. No other liquid being handy he would drink the contents of his clepsydra. That stopped the clock, of course, and he would everlastingly lie abed waiting for morning to come. He would never miss the water till the clepsydra was dry.

King Alfred burned candles to tell the time by, each candle lasting two hours. A dozen candles would make one day, though he got a little confused when the grocer, in order to hold the royal patronage and advertise himself as the special candle maker for the king, gave him thirteen for a dozen.

There are few kings since Alfred's time who could make note of time in that manner, because so many of them were in the habit of burning their candles at both ends.—Texas Siftings.

How Pat Converted His Fellow-Convicts.

Yesterday it was the good fortune of a reporter of this paper to meet a priest who is frequently called to the Charity hospital, and who has accomplished much good in reforming the unfortunate people so often found in that institution. During the conversation the reverend father told numerous amusing anecdotes of his personal experiences, and wound up a very pleasing evening by telling a funny story about a priest in Ireland who was laboring to get a number of convicts to join the Catholic church. It seems that seven men were sentenced to be transported, and among them was an Irishman convicted of counterfeiting. According to the custom of the country the convicts were allowed to choose any religion they desired to adopt, and the Irishman made up his mind that they should all become Catholics. Accordingly, when they assembled in the prison yard the subject of religion was brought up by the Irishman, who said: "Boys, we have all been bad together, we have made lots of money and spent it, and now since we all have to join the church there is no reason why we should be separated. I now propose that we toss a ha'penny and shape our course on the result. If a harp comes up we will be Catholics, and if a queen shows on top we will be Protestants."

"Agreed," said the convicts, and Pat tossed the ha'penny and the harp won.

Accordingly, they all became Catholics, and just before their departure the parish priest approached Pat and asked him how he managed to convert his fellow convicts. "Oh, easy enough," replied Pat, and then he told the story of the ha'penny.

"Did you risk your immortal soul on the turning of a penny?" exclaimed the priest in holy horror.

"Indeed I did not," replied Pat; "that ha'penny had a harp on both sides. I made it myself."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Woods Were Full of Them.

In the —— regiment, Indiana volunteers, during the late war, was an unusually eccentric native of "Erin Go Bragh," who had the fortune while on picket duty to capture a Confederate soldier and take him to camp.

In the same company was a lazy and far from courageous comrade, who, seeing Dan with a prisoner to be turned over to the colonel of the regiment, said:

"Dan, you are obliged to go back on duty; let me take the prisoner up to headquarters."

"Bedad, an' not a bit of it. If you want a rebel go out and catch one for yourself. The bush is full of 'em," was Dan's reply.—Detroit Free Press.

Blameless Angels.

The new baby had proved itself the possessor of extraordinary vocal powers, and had exercised them much to Johnny's annoyance.

One day he said to his mother:

"Ma, little brother came from heaven didn't he?"

"Yes, dear."

Johnny was silent for some time, and then he went on.

"Say, ma."

"What is it, Johnny?"

"I don't blame the angels for bouncing him, do you?"—Merchant Traveler.

He Wasn't in the No-Fade Business.

"Didn't you warrant this suit of clothes not to fade?" indignantly demanded a workingman of old Moses on Chatham street.

"No, my frendt."

"Yes, you did. I bought 'em on your warrant not to fade."

"My frendt, keep cool. You vhas in der wrong shtore. I vhas der man who warrants my clothes not to shrink. It vhas my brudder, two doors avhay, who goes on der no-fade peesness und fails regularly twice a year. He shust failed again last night.—Wall Street News.

Had a Right to Laugh.

"Hello, Charley! What's up? Never saw you looking so jolly and happy."

"My best girl just got married."

"Got married! Why, man, is that anything to be gay and festive over? You ought to be in the last stages of melancholy."

"That's all right. You see, I'm the fellow she married."—Merchant Traveler.

WANTED TO SEE THE ASTORS.

How a Curiosity Seeker Once Managed to Secure a Brief Interview.

I know a man who desired to get an audience with the present heads of the Astor family. They are not easily accessible for strangers. Every caller is required to state his business to a clerk, who communicates with one of the great millionaires if necessary, but more than likely refers the matter to a competent subordinate. But my friend was bound to see the Astors, just to gratify his curiosity, for he had no business with them. Their offices are in a bank-like structure in a side street close to Broadway. On one front door is the name "John Jacob Astor" and on the other "William W. Astor." He entered an interior that was fitted up with high rails and inclosed desks, so that the visitor had to make his application to a face that appeared behind an aperture in a wired fence. Two begging Sisters of Charity were being politely, but firmly rebuffed, and several tenants were paying their rents. To all inquirers for an Astor the same answer was given—that neither was to be seen. The curiosity seeker comprehended that he would fail unless he resorted to some winning device.

"I have an appointment with the old gentleman, he said, drawing his watch, after the manner of a hurried man; "I suppose they are in?"

"I will see," replied the clerk; "shall I take in your card?"

"If you please," and the imposter produced one; "and say to them that I am sorry to be five minutes late."

The ingenuity of the attack brought victory. He was shown promptly into the presence of the two Astors. They were old-fashioned, gray of hair and whiskers, and not in any way remarkable to look at. The apartment was the private office of John Jacob Astor, but William was there, and seemingly dominant with his larger stature, fuller face and more emphatic mien. The furniture was very heavy, but plain, and the place suggested the president's room in a bank of moderate pretenses. William still held the card in his hand, and was evidently trying to recall the name as that of somebody who had made an appointment.

"What is it, sir?" he said inquiringly.

"I called to see whether it would be of any use to make an offer for some real estate that belongs to you," responded the caller coolly.

He knew well enough that he was safe, because the Astors sell no property under any circumstances. Said William: "I hardly think so. What piece had you in mind?"

"The Astor house. There is a project to buy that, and——"

"Quite impracticable. No offer in any amount would be considered." But he had seen the Astors, all the same.—"Uncle Bill" in Chicago Herald.

City Ragamuffins in a "Pig-Boat."

That there is not a small army of boys drowned in the North and East rivers every day is certainly no fault of theirs. Every time I go steamboating we have narrow escapes from running down all manner of skiffs and dories, sail boats and scows, not to mention the pig-boats, which seem to be in the largest favor with our juvenile watermen, probably because they are the most perilous craft they can find. The pig-boat derives its name from the fact that it is only fit for a pig to eat out of. It is a floating coffin, constructed of three long planks for the sides and bottom and two short boards for the ends. It is commonly caulked with the black pitch used by roofers, and when it is in the water looks like no other craft under the sun. You will meet the pig-boat, manned by a crew of merry ragamuffins, in the wide stretches of the bay and the turbulent tides of Hell Gate. How it gets there and how it ever gets back to the shore is a mystery known only to Providence. Rickety and frail as the pig-boat is, though, I have never heard of one being sunk or capsizing, which is a better record than any of the other style of river craft can show.—New York News "Babble."

Increased Value of Black Walnut.

I remember the time, in 1855, when they were building the Osage bridge for the Missouri Pacific, I bought clear walnut lumber planks, averaging two feet wide, for $25 a thousand. The same kind of lumber is worth $200 a thousand now and hard to get at that. We have walnut logs in Kansas thirty miles to a railroad, and can't get enough even at that expense to meet the demand. The whole country has to depend on the far west for walnut now. Indiana formerly was the great state for it, but there it has been cut down. A great deal of the timber used to be shipped in square logs to Europe, but there is not so much of that done now. The demand is too great at home. The expense of getting it to the sea coast is very great, but they send it over for ballast very cheap. Gnarled walnut knots are almost as valuable as gold nuggets, but the trouble is to get good sound ones. Solid walnut knots are worth twenty-five cents a pound. I knew a man who sent one in from the northern part of this state. It was a beauty, solid to the core, and about half the size of a flour barrel, for which he received $88.—William Druhe in Globe-Democrat.

The Redemption of Damaged Notes.

"Can you show me some curious specimens of notes which have been redeemed?"

"Certainly. Here is an odd-looking affair which is a $1 note. A man carelessly left it in the pocket of a white vest, which garment was shortly after both washed and ironed. You can imagine the state of a legal tender after undergoing such a thrilling ordeal. Here is a $2 note pierced with four holes. It was found carelessly folded in the pocket of a murdered man. He had been shot several times, one of the bullets tearing its way through the folded note, which was shortly afterwards sent here for redemption by the dead man's relatives. We did our best to alleviate their grief with a brand new bill. Still another specimen comes from the Chicago fire. It is simply a quantity of ashes pasted on a sheet of paper, and represends a $1 note. Your inexperienced eye can not discern a figure or letter upon it, but our clerks displayed little embarassment in recognizing it as an old friend. We received a vast amount of charred money from the Chicago fire, and redeemed the larger portion of it.—New York Mail and Express Interview.

What is a "Joobahaw?"

The New Orleans States has a word which it thinks should accompany the word "boodle" in the dictionary which President Porter, of Yale, is now editing. It is "joobahaw." A "joobahaw," it explains, is a man who shoots off his mouth for no other reason than that he has a mouth to shoot.—Exchange.

GENERAL NOTES.

BOOTH'S PISTOL AND DAGGER. I saw, the other day, two of the most curious and interesting relics of the greatest tragedy in American history. They are the pistol with which John Wilkes Booth shot President Lincoln, and the dagger he held in his hand when he leaped from the box to the stage of the theatre, crying "Sic semper tyrannis!" These relics are preserved in a bureau of one of the departments of the Government, and with them is the bullet that struck Mr. Lincoln down. The pistol is the most interesting of the lot. It is one of the kind known as the Deringer, made in Philadelphia, which was very famous all through the South and Southwest thirty years ago. The one in question is of beautiful workmanship. Its barrel is only two inches in length, and the bullet weighs about a quarter of an ounce. The entire length of the weapon is but four inches. Its mounting is of silver, and the lock is one of the finest and most perfect pieces of workmanship I have ever seen, even in these weapons, which were very expensive and elaborate. The bullet is much battered, and was evidently driven into the muzzle-loader by the use of a mallet and iron loading rod. Considering the heavy charge of powder under the bullet, before it was fired, the latter must have been only half an inch from the muzzle, and could easily have been touched with one's little finger inserted into the barrel. The marks of the rifling in the barrel are clearly visible on the bullet, which was very much flattened from striking the skull. Altogether, a more interesting and ghastly curio I have never seen. While handling the pistol I looked at the end of the breech. I found there a receptacle for percussion caps, which had evidently been overlooked, and upon opening it I found a solitary cap, which Booth had evidently put there himself, intending, if by any chance the one on the tube of the pistol exploded without firing it, to have another ready to his hand. [Washington Herald.

COST OF THE WHITE HOUSE.—Most people believe that the $50,000 a year which the President gets as his salary is the sum total. This is a mistake. The estimate of the amount which Congress is to appropriate this year lies before us open at the page relating to the President. We see that $36,094 is asked for him, in addition to his salary of $50,000, to pay the salaries of his subordinates and clerks. His private Secretary is paid $3,350, his Assistant Private Secretary $2,250, his stenographer $1,800, five messengers each get $1,200, a steward $1,800, two door-keepers who each get $1,200, four other clerks at good salaries, one telegraph operator, two ushers getting $1,200, a watchman who gets $900, and a man to take care of fires who receives $864 a year. In addition to this there is set down $8,000 for incidental expenses, such as stationery, carpets, and the care of the President's stables. And further on, under another heading, there is a demand for nearly $40,000 more. Of this $12,500 is for repairs and furnishing the White House, $2,500 for fuel, $3,000 is for the green house, and $15,000 is for gas, matches and the stables. The White house, all told, costs the country, in connection with the President, considerably over $125,000 a year.

N. G. Symonds, the well known clerk and treasurer of the Salem and South Danvers Oil Company, has tendered his resignation. In the letter he gives some very interesting information. The tanners and curriers of the town, as well as Salem, are largely interested in the company. Mr. Symonds says:

During the first fourteen years we paid in cash dividends, $47,748.78 and a stock dividend of 36,000.000

$83,748.78

an average per year of $5,982.05 equal to 49 85-100 per cent.

Continuing the record, upon the original basis of 120 shares, we have paid in cash $96,708.78 and in stock at the estimated value of $60 per share $21,600—making $118,308.78, so that one holding his original stock has received during 31 years on each share an annual average of 31 80-100 per cent.

Of the original Directors only one survives; and of the 50 originally interested in the company, 31 have joined the silent majority.

By an examination it appears that we had in 1885 and '86 ninety-five customers, only 10 of whom to-day use our products—85 are dead or have given up the business. Such great changes seem incredible, but a careful review demonstrates the fact.

The Empire State has returned to Boston and resumes her trips in Boston harbor this week. To-morrow she sails for the Isles of Shoals; Friday, an ocean trip; Saturday, matinee trip off Marblehead; and Sunday to Provincetown. The steamer leaves Battery wharf at 9.30.

"Yes," said Col. Short, editor of the Crosby County Clarion and Farmer's Vindicator, 'I believe in proverbs. Out in my town one of the most prominent citizens who is worth more than $40,000 got into some trouble about a married woman. At first I thought I would give him a blast, because morality is my strong card, and everybody expected me to go for him, but I remembered that proverb about silence being golden. I called on that rich man and asked him what he thought about it, and he paid me $200 in gold to keep quiet about the affair."

The editor of a contemporary dolefully remarks, and we suppose speaks from experience: "The time of year is drawing near when the wives and mothers of America will attire themselves in a faded, ragged calico Mother Hubbard, encase their heads in a tattered remnant of a woolen shawl, and tear up the carpets, pile up all the furniture in the back yard, scold everybody, slop water over every floor between the roof and the ground, set out cold dinners and then call the operation "house cleaning."

HAND-BOOK OF ESSEX COUNTY.—George Chinn of the Beverly Citizen has just issued the third edition of his hand-book of the county. The book has been thoroughly revised, the greater part of it having been re-written, and enlarged to nearly double the former number of pages. It contains all information essential to the wheelman or general tourist, concerning every town and city in the county, with mention of their objects of interest, hotels, 'cycling clubs, etc., and road routes to every place with distances and condition of roads. There is also a sketch of the League of Essex County Wheelman and a chapter on the literature of the "wheel," which is the only complete review of the subject extant. The price of the book is twenty cents. Published at Beverly, Mass.

We are in receipt of a large and very carefully executed engraving of the new Standard Oil Company Building, 26 Broadway, New York, which is noteworthy as the finest business structure on the greatest commercial thoroughfare of this continent. The enormous granite pile, 200 feet deep, and almost two hundred feet in height from foundation stone to pinnacle, is entirely given up to the executive offices of the Company, which is entitled to credit for having added so imposing and enduring an example to the great commercial monuments of the Metropolis.

We are not all lawyers, hence such a pointer as this from an exchange, is perhaps made opportunely. It says witness fees in civil cases are never paid until the case is decided, settled and the costs paid. When subpoened, however, you may demand your fees, and if not paid you are not compelled to testify. In criminal cases, as quick as a witness is dismissed by the court he may demand and collect his fees.

NEEDHAM'S IDEA.

An interesting experiment was devised 137 years ago by an English Catholic priest, named Needham, in association with the French naturalist Buffon, but only properly carried out seventeen years later by an Italian philosopher, the Abbe Spallanzani. Its purpose was the same as Redi's, to keep an organic substance so that nothing could alight on it from without in order to find whether, under such conditions, life could spontaneously develop within it. So minute are the organisms, however, that multitudes might be deposited, unseen, from the air during even a few minutes' exposure. With great ingenuity were the altered circumstances met. It was argued that heat would destroy organisms, as it destroys other living things. So an organic infusion was placed in a flask and boiled, and, while it was boiling, the neck of the flask was fused and sealed by a hot flame. Thus any living thing in the infusion must have been killed and no others could enter. When this had been properly done the flask might be kept for years without any animalcule (so called) ever appearing in the infusion.

The August Magazine of American History is a spirited midsummer number. The topics treated are agreeably diversified, and of general interest to the reading public everywhere. The first, handsomely illustrated with authentic pictures never before published, is a graphic description of the historic Maine Home of General Henry Knox, of revolutionary renown, by Miss E. Marguerite Lindley; the second article is by the well-known and eminent scholar, Israel Ward Andrews, LL. D., of Marietta College, entitled The North-west Territory: Its Ordinance and Settlement; and the third, The Convention of New York. 1788, is a continuation of Mr. A. W. Clason's admirable series of papers on the adoption of our constitution. To the War Studies this month are three important contributions: General Lee's Cedar Mountain, which, in connection with the author's paper in the July number, will be read with profound interest; Negro Slaves During the Civil War, and their relation to the Confederacy, by Col. Charles Jones, Jr., the distinguished Georgia historian; and a stirring battle sketch, Called At the Death Angle, by Charles A. Patch. The volumes of this magazine, handsomely bound, are very much in demand. They grow, rather than diminish in value with age. Puplished at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

HAY FEVER.—I have been a great sufferer from hay fever for 15 years, and have tried various things without doing any good. I read of the many wondrous cures of Ely's Cream Balm and thought I would try once more. In fifteen minutes after one application I was wonderfully helped. Two weeks ago I commenced using it and now I feel entirely cured. It is the greatest discovery ever known or heard of.—Duhamel Clark, Farmer Lee, Mass.

There is the usnal crop of summer vagabond cats. The deserted creatures may be seen night and day in a wholly demoralized condition, prowling about in the stealthy, frightened and hungry way which has become so painfully familiar. It is of course idle to dwell upon a topic that has annually called forth so much well sounded indignation without producing any proportionate good results; but it is not amiss to protest, though for the thousandth time, against the heartless cruelty that leaves the poor animals to shift for themselves while their owners are away.

WHY IS IT —That the sale of Hood's Sarsaparilla continues at such a rapidly increasing rate? It is,— 1st: Because of the positive curative value of Hood's Sarsaparilla itself.

2d: Because of the conclusive evidence of remarkable cures effected by it, unsurpassed and seldom equalled by any other medicine. Send to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass., for book containing many statements of cures.

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. WOOD, Bloomington, Ill.

For Twenty Years

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. BALCOM, Shirley, Mass.

"I suffered from what the doctors called muscular rheumatism. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured." J. V. A. PROUDFOOT, letter carrier, Chicago, Ill.

We shall be glad to send, free of charge, to all who may desire, a book containing many additional statements of cures by

THERE IS NO difference of opinion as to the necessity of vigorous action being taken to prevent or suppress any violent action by mobs in this town. We say this, notwithstanding the vote passed Sunday afternoon, which would seem to intimate otherwise. Whatever happens, whether the differences between the employers and the workmen are settled in a week or a year, WE MUST HAVE ORDER AT ALL HAZARDS. There must be no mistake about this. Mob law strikes at the very root of a good government. Those who uphold it, who favor it, are not worthy the respect or consideration of law abiding citizens.

The officers of this town have the sympathy and support of the citizens in maintaining order here. It must be possible for ANY MAN, be he union or non-union, to walk the streets of this town peaceably and without molestation. No city or town can be considered the home of loyal citizens until such a thing is possible. No man is persuaded by violence. It has been to the credit of this town, heretofore, that there has been order among the workmen. It can no longer be said. But much can be done to retreive the past reputation of the town. All good citizens should hasten to wipe out the stain of last week's proceedings, and range themselves openly and publicly on the side of peace and order and good government.

THE LEADERS of the Knights of Labor realize the position in which they have been placed by the action of Sunday last. No one regrets it more, we learn, than Mr. W. J. McCarthy whose remarks gave the crowd the impression that there was something in the resolutions offered by Mr. Upton which they should not vote for. They could hardly have given any other impression. Yet for a man to state, as he did plainly, that it was the first duty of the men to behave themselves, and that he was not in favor of mob laws or violence, and in the same breath oppose the very resolutions which meant what he had previously advocated, indicated that he must have been in a state of great excitement, however calm he might have outwardly appeared to be. It may have been the intention of Mr. McCarthy, as has been stated, to draw out the manufacturers and amend the resolutions looking to a settlement of the difficulty. But the result showed that the meeting was beyond his control in that direction.

Intentionally or otherwise, the assembly, composed largely of Knights of Labor, have put themselves before the world in the singular position of voting down a resolution upholding the town authorities in preserving order. If such is not their position they should make haste to rectify it. Whether it be in favor of law and order or not, mob law will not be permitted in Essex County. But we do not believe the leaders of the Assemblies in this town, or their members, when the matter is fairly presented to them, are in favor of anything but order. Their words and actions, outside of Sunday afternoon's proceedings, go to show this. We record the following resolutions which were adopted by L. A. 2947, shortly after the meeting of Sunday had been held:

Resolved, That we, as law-abiding citizens and members of L. A. 2947, K. of L., do deeply deplore and utterly condemn the acts of lawlessness and disorder of Aug. 7.

Resolved, That we do pledge ourselves in conjunction with all good citizens to do all in our power to prevent a repetition of such acts in the future, and to uphold the constituted authorities in maintaining peace and good order in town.

EXECUTIVE BOARD.
L. A. 2947, K. of L.
Peabody, Aug. 9, 1886.

With the stigma of the vote Sunday afternoon which must be attached to them, the Knights should go further than these resolutions. They should offer themselves to the authorities, as we understand many of them have done and be sworn in as special policemen. They should aid in bringing to justice those of their number, if there be any, in the act of committing violence or violating the laws. They should discipline their members, if there be any, who favor mob law and violence. This they can do and ought to do, if they desire to be found on the side of law and order, and the preservation of peace and quiet.

THE SELECTMEN have advised the manufacturers, as will be seen in another column, to import no more foreign labor. This is along the line of settlement adopted by the Mayor of Cambridge with Mr. Squire and his employes.

As we said last week, the manufacturers must not expect to break up the organization of the Knights of Labor. They may resist dictation; they may oppose all the methods of the organization, but they cannot legally or consistently deny the men the same rights they claim for themselves.

In many shops there is no grievance between the employers and men; there was no trouble of hours or wages. It simply was the fact that the men could not and would not go to work under that circular. We believe that a settlement could be reached inside of twenty-four hours if the manufacturers would admit the right of the men to be members of that Organization.

The manufacturers claim to be unwilling to treat with the Executive Board of the Knights. Yet they themselves are submissive to the committee of their own number in whose hands the matter has been left, and by whose direction the circular was posted. If reports are true, they are pursuing the same tactics which they are condemning in the men with manufacturers who are disposed to be restive under the restrictions of the Committee. Gentlemen, the good of the community and the town is at stake. Business of all kinds is a standstill. Is it not right that both sides should be willing to yield something and have our town restored once more to peace and quiet?

MEMBERS OF the Knights of Labor have volunteered in goodly numbers to preserve order, and have ranged themselves on the side of all good citizens. We think the disturbances are at an end. It may be questioned whether the parading of the non-union men in a large wagon the day of their arrival in town, by the manufacturers, was not injudicious, and whether it did not have a tendency to inflame the feelings of the crowd. It was right they should enter the town in any manner chosen. But under the circumstances, would it not have been expedient for them to have entered quietly?

The importation of non-union men shows that the manufacturers are ready to resume business. Can they not resume with the workmen who have always been in their employ? We believe they can. We believe the men are ready to meet them more than half way. We believe the moment the manufacturers yield the right of the employes to belong to the organization of which they are members—that moment every shop in town will be running at the full capacity desired.

THE CALLING of the mass meeting Sunday afternoon by the Law and Order League was as unwise as it was a grevious error. The Selectmen of this town had and still have all the authority that is needed to preserve order and maintain the authority of the law. They ought to have known that in resisting violence in the suppression of any riot, they would have the support of the law abiding citizens of this town. There was no need for such resolutions to impel them to their duty. If they did not know that duty, if they did not know that their hands would be upheld in any measures necessary to be taken for the protection of the lives and property of the people residing in town, it is time they resigned and made way for others who would not be governed in their action by a resolution presented by the Law and Order League.

If the meeting was called for the purpose of ascertaining how the workmen—how the Knights of Labor, perhaps—would vote on such resolutions, it was worse than an error. Calm and deliberate measures for the suppression of a riot do not originate, usually, in a mafs meeting of citizens where both sides in a controversy are represented, and where it is impossible that other than feeling will be manifested. It should not have been expected that such a meeting, open to remarks from anyone, could do otherwise than drift into the labor troubles which are the cause of all the disturbance. That it continued so long as it did without more being said for which regret was manifested afterwards, is cause for congratulation. If the Selectmen wished the advice of the property holders, who have large interests at stake, such citizens would have been glad to meet them, as they did afterwards, at the bidding of the Law and Order League. The mass meeting should not have been held.

THE REPORTS of the disturbances here, in the Boston press, have been highly sensational. In particular was this the case with the report in the Sunday Globe, which was full of inaccuracies and was specially distinguished for the lack of information it contained. The truth in the article could have been boiled down to a dozen lines. Those of our readers who know Mr. B. D. Hill, the regular correspondent in this vicinity, need not to be told that the account was not furnished by him. The report of Monday was cut off in the middle of a sentence and evidently half completed. Tuesday it was not much better, with its story of mounted police and big elephant which the Selectmen have on their hands. It may amuse the public outside of Peabody, but to our citizens it is ridiculous. A paper with the circulation of the Globe should make some attempt at reliability. It is not news—it is sensation. The accounts in the Boston Journal have been fair and reasonably correct, and do credit to Mr. Archer, the gentlemanly correspondent of that paper.

Last week we placed Mr. John P. Peabody, the well known dry goods dealer of Salem, in a wrong light before the public by neglecting to copy the advertisement of his closing out sale. Notwithstanding our mistake it is well known to all our readers that Mr. Peabody keeps abreast of the times and in many departments leads all competitors. His great clearing out sale which began last week, was an assured success from the start, not that he had a bankrupt stock but that he was able to mark his own immense stock at such low figures that the public readily "caught on" (if we may be allowed the expression) and his store was liberally patronized during the sale. There are remaining many special bargains, and an early visit to his store will convince our readers that not only special bargains are offered, but that on all the staple articles low prices nave been made.

A Dover reporter interviewed an engineer of one of the largest engines of the Boston & Maine railroad about the cost of running a locomotive, to which he replied that it costs a little more than twenty cents a mile on the average. Nearly eight cents of this is for fuel, seven and a quarter cents for pay of engineer and fireman, one-half cent for oil and waste, and a little more than four and a quarter cents for repairs. A ton of coal will run a locomotive twenty-four miles on this road, a pint of oil eleven miles, and a pound of waste one hundred and twenty-three miles. There is but little more cost to run the big engines like the Norris, Bay State and others, than to run those little fellows of older pattern.

Mr. George E. Pearson, who is acknowledged to be the leader in the retail shoe trade of Salem, is offering special inducements this week. Mr. Pearson has had a life experience at the business, and his trade comes from all parts of Essex County incuding a large portion of the summer residents of Swampscott, Beverly Farms and Manchester.

Past students and those interested in business education will be pleased to notice in another column that the Burdett Business College, Boston, has been forced, through its constantly increasing patronage, to remove to 592 Washington St., Boston, where spacious, light and elegant offices and departments have been specially constructed for it.

The preacher at the South Church last Sabbath was Rev. D. Wallace of Detroit, Mich. He preached a forcible sermon on the Communion of the Holy Spirit. During the vacation at other churches all are welcome to the services here, which are unusually interesting from the ability of the preachers supplying the pulpit.

Every woman who desires to vote for school committee at the local election next spring, and who has not a receipted property or poll tax bill, bearing date of 1885, must give or send her name to the Assessors for assessment, on or before September 15.

D. B. H. Power & Co are offering special inducements in oil stoves. A call at their Salem store will insure the prompt delivery of goods from their extensive emporium at Marblehead.

The shipments of leather from Peabody and Salem for the week ending August 7 were 1855 rolls, 88 bundles, 5 barrels of leather and 67 bundles of skins.

RIOTOUS DEMONSTRATIONS.

Outside Police Summoned.

SCENES AND INCIDENTS.

The quiet which has previously prevailed in town despite the large numbers of men out of work, was broken last Friday by the arrival in town of several non-union men. They were not the first non-union men to arrive and to work in town since the trouble. But others came quietly, a few at a time and without much notice. These men were expected. Word had been given out that they were to arrive, and some time previous to the arrival of the train on the Wakefield branch at 4 1-2 P. M., large bark wagons were in readiness at the depot to carry them and their baggage to their destination. They were driven to Foster street to the tanneries there, and thence, at supper time, to Baldwin's hotel, where they remained over night. The men, it is understood, came from the intelligence office connected with the Y. M. C. A. of Boston. Some members of the Knights of Labor interviewed the men that evening and all of the fifteen, except eight, were induced to return to Boston. Those who remained were followed up Foster street by a large number of people, the next morning, but no disturbance was made. At noon there was a larger crowd, and when the whistle blew at twelve o'clock there was a mob in the streets. On the appearance of the wagon containing the men, there was a cry of "scabs" and stones and other missiles were thrown. The wagon was driven rapidly through the Square and was soon out of the reach of the crowd who were kept back by officers Peasley and Crowley. A large number of the crowd, however, followed the men to their boarding house, the house of Oscar Fellows, in Bowditch Court, where more trouble began. Stones were thrown at the building, panes of glass were broken, and there was a confusion of glass, stones and eatables on the dining table. In the midst of the trouble officers Peaseley and Crowley rushed into the crowd and arrested one man who was seen to throw a stone. Attempts were made by the crowd to rescue him, but the sight of a few revolvers induced them to change their determination. Chief Peasley took the names of leading participants in the riot, and a dispatch was sent to Salem at 12.30 o'clock for aid. Shortly before 1 o'clock Deputy Marshal Skinner and twelve men from Salem arrived on the scene, and when the men returned to the shops there were no violent demonstrations. The Salem officers remained during the afternoon and evening. The entire force of police and constables were put on duty. Extra police were sworn in, and a detail of firemen was stationed at each engine house all night. There was no further trouble, however, and on Sunday there was quiet everywhere.

Notices of a mass meeting read in the churches brought out a large gathering at 4.30 on Sunday, an account of which is given elsewhere. Later in the evening a citizens' meeting was held in the Selectmen's room, to which the Law and Order League and Manufacturers were invited, and the situation discussed. Measures were devised for the addition of more police, for the calling in of policemen from other towns and making a requisition on the State for some officers. Monday morning there was a large gathering on the Square when the men came through, with the Peabody and Salem officers. Not a stone was thrown and their was no disturbance. The streets were full of people, though, nearly all day, and reminded one of a Fourth of July or similar holiday. During the noon hour a Pole named Bloomberg, in the employ of George J. Winchester, was set upon by a crowd of some twenty men, and terribly beaten, and at one time it was thought he would not recover, but he is very comfortable at this writing. A non-union man was assaulted on Boston street at about the same time, who is in the employ of S. A. Southwick. During the afternoon several state officers arrived and took measures to ascertain the parties who had committed the assaults.

Towards evening ten policemen from Haverhill arrived. They came on Nason's train and were in charge of the Assistant Marshal of that city. They were large, fine looking men and would do honor to any force in the country. They were the object of respect and admiration.

About noon Monday, Mr. Spaulding arrived in town from Wells, Maine, and was at the meeting of the Selectmen. It was not expected that he would agree with the Board, and if reports are true, he made it exceedingly lively for the other members. But one thing Mr. Spaulding did for which he should have the commendation of all citizens. He went to the Knights of Labor hall, explained to them the inconsistency and foolishness of their action Sunday evening, and advised them to keep away from the public streets and discountenance any disturbance. He told them that order should be preserved at all hazards. His words were listened to with respect, and his advice followed. Tuesday morning there were very few people on the Square and no occasion was manifest for the presence of any police. At noon the same thing was repeated. There was not half the number of people in Foster street or in the vicinity of the Square that had congregated the day before.

The Haverhill police returned home yesterday afternoon and the presence around town of some well known faces, belonging to the State police, was an indication that these gentlemen were to be with us a few days. Later in the afternoon Chief Wade arrived in town, and the whole force of officers arrived at different times during the day. A requisition for them was made on Gov. Robinson yesterday morning, chairman Southwick of the Board of Selectmen going to Boston in person and calling upon Gov. Robinson. Chief Wade said that they were asked for in Cambridge but as that city had a well established police force and was able to call upon neighboring cities for aid, Gov. Robinson did not consider it necessary to send them. In this case, the Governor looked upon the matter as important, and was glad to accede to the wish of the Selectmen. They would remain here as long as there was any need for their services or until they were ordered away by his Excellency. At the suggestion and request of Rev. W. Spaulding, a list of names, of men belonging to the Knights of Labor, was sent in to the Selectmen by the Executive Boards of the Assemblies in town. At a meeting of the Board yesterday afternoon the following were appointed and before six o'clock many of them came to the Town House to be sworn in. The following are the special officers selected:

John Sullivan 4th, Batt Sullivan 2d, Michael Regan, Timothy Carroll, Edward Sexton, Timothy O'Brien 2d, Patt. Cashman, Joseph H. Miller, William B. Flannagan, Edward J. Flynn, Charles Corlin, George N. Miller, M. J. McElligott, INCIDENTAL NOTES.

The moment that Salem was called on for police protection for this town, her roughs and plug-uglies came up here and played no small part in the disgraceful scenes on our streets.

Up to Friday night there had been no disturbance on our streets, and there would have been none then, but for the publicity that was given the arival of the non-union men.

The Knights of Labor made a great mistake in not adopting the resolutions offered at the Sunday meeting, as it placed them on record before the public in an entirely false position.

The first trouble on Saturday was like a thunderbolt from a clear sky. No trouble was anticipated by the police, and officer Sweeney had gone to dinner, and Chief Peasley and Crowley were on guard. But they were equal to the occasion, and through all that has followed have been cool and collected. In fact all our police force have shown they were equal to any emergency.

It was a serious sight that was witnessed Monday noon, when armed police in large numbers were required to protect five stalwart men from a crowd of one thousand of their fellow me, who only needed a reckless leader to "fan the spark of mobbism" into a flame.

That the Rev. Willard Spaulding has a large influence with the men was shown yesterday. On his arrival in town Monday, he advised them to keep off the street while the non-union men were passing, and to preserve order at all hazards; and as a result the streets were nearly deserted yesterday.

On Monday not a cry was heard from the crowd on Foster street, until the procession reached Spring street, and even then the cry of "scab" came from the women.

A large number of private watchmen have been sworn in to protect the factories. Any one caught prowling around them, will be arrested at sight.

Chairman Southwick said the manufacturers objected to the employment of Knights of Labor as special police.

At a meeting of the Selectmen Monday evening, it was voted to advise the manufacturers not to bring any more outside help into town under the present exigency, and also voted to request Franklin Osborne Jr., & Co., to lodge their men nearer the factory, as the carting of them through the street six times a day, only incited to acts of violence.

Mr. Franklin Osborne presented himself before the Selectmen Monday night and desired to be sworn in as a special police officer. He was objected to by Rev. Mr. Spaulding, but he was sworn in.

Settle it by arbitration! Arbitrate!

People can't be too careful how they start a story concerning another, in these times of excitement. Some one started the story that one of our milkmen remarked to the police, when he made the arrest of the man for throwing stones, that he "had secured the right one." As a result, fifty customers left him the next day. Now the facts were, the milkman did not see any one throw a stone, nor did he make such a remark.

Chief Peasley was struck in the leg with a rock last Saturday, and a big bruise is the result.

The manufacturers held a meeting Monday, and the feeling was freely expressed that it was not their intention to fill their yards with new men, but only to employ a sufficient number to keep their stock from spoiling.

Mayor John M. Raymond, of Salem, was in town Monday in consultation with the Selectmen, and it was decided that it would be better to ask the manufacturers to leave the mattter to the State Board of Arbitration, but that law and order must first be maintained. Official action was postponed for a few days.

It is a significant fact that during the excitement of last Saturday noon, a non-union man employed at Joseph H. Poor's passed through the crowd to and from work without being molested, while those that were paraded through the streets were stoned.

At one o'clock Saturday it is reported that it was suggested to the Selectmen that they swear in twenty or fifty members of the Knights of Labor as special police, and allow the Salem officers to remain at home. The suggestion was not entertained till late in the afternoon, too late for service that day.

"If Nathan Poor had presented those resolutions, I would have voted for them," remarked one man as he came out of the hall Sunday, "but Mr. Upton never had anything in common with us and never advocated anything that was favored by the workingmen in his life."

It looks as if Mr. McCarthy "lost his head" at the Sunday meeting. He should not have killed the resolutions unless he had others to offer.

Rev. Father Masterson, of the Catholic Church, in announcing from his pulpit the meeting in town hall Sunday afternoon, gave his hearers some good advice and urged them to maintain order and not be engaged in any rowdyism or law breaking.

It is said that a Globe reporter was denied admission to the Selectmen's meeting last Monday night and took a seat just outside the door. While Mr. Spaulding was addressing the Board, Mr. Southwick is said to have quietly slipped out and given the reporter such information as he saw fit. About this time Mr. Spaulding discovered him and remarks about as follows resulted: "Who is that young fellow? Is he a reporter? Let him come in. Let him take down the motions that are passed and the motions that we refuse to pass." At this there was a chorus of objections from the rest of the board, and Mr. Spaulding said that he would give him his side of the story. The reporter gave a detailed account of the occurrence Tuesday morning, and of the endeavors of Chairman Southwick to dissuade Mr. Spaulding from talking to him.

The officials of Peabody are a queer lot.—Boston Globe.

Some one said it was a good thing that officer Goodwin was on a vacation. We are inclined to think there may be some truth in the remark.

The prompt and outspoken action of L. A. 2947 in favor of preserving law and order, and their offer of special police from among their number, has won for them the respect of all citizens.

The effect of the latest hot wave is seen in the vote of a mass meeting at Peabody in favor of mob rule in that town.

As soon as the temperature moderates, this insanity will pass.—Boston Record.

There were two police officers in the town of Peabody last Saturday, who, by their loyalty to law and good order, by their faithfulness to their public duties and their spirit of fearless determination, ought to be long and favorably remembered by the law abiding citizens of that town, as they certainly will be by a good many people outside of Peabody limits. These were chief-of-police Thomas W. Peasley and Timothy Crowley, who happened to be the only officers at hand and available at the moment to face the unexpected mob which so suddenly gathered on Saturday. Between their personal courage and the determined and discreet manner in which they brought to the attention of a mass of men the moral power of the law, they saved to the town a scene of outrage which might have been, and probably would have been, very far worse than it turned out to be.—Salem Gazette.

It is fortunate for this town that no liquor was to be had by the element who created the disturbance last Saturday, and every man that voted "no license" may congratulate himself on having performed a part in saving this town from mob rule.

Mr. H. C. Bronsdon, Supt. of the Employment Bureau of the Young Men's Christian Union of Boston, publishes a card denying that they furnished any of the non-union men for Peabody tanneries as had been reported.

At noon Tuesday, only a few men congregated on the street, and the majority of them were those who had come out of curiosity to see what was going on.

It seemed like bringing the scenes of Chicago nearer home.

A break in the manufacturers' Association occurred Monday morning. Newman Perkins sent for his men, who have all returned to work, satisfactory terms of settlement having been agreed upon.

Several of the splitters have left the Knights and returned or will return to work. It is understood that one of them remarked that he had lost $120, during the time he had been out of work, and he propposed in the future to sell his own labor, and not dispose of it through a broker.

The Cadet Camp was alarmed Monday night by the report that Salem and Peabody had called on the Governor for militia, and that the Cadets were to see actual service, by being ordered here to put down the riot.

Haverhill sent ten solid men to help increase our police force.

A reader of the PRESS sends in the three following problems which we publish in accordance with his request:

If a man employs 100 workmen, and makes a profit of .02 1-2 an hour on each man's work, how much money does he make in one year, if the men work ten hours a day, 310 days in a year? Ans. $7750.00.

If the employer pays his 100 men, each, .02 1-2 more an hour, so that he does not make a cent, how much more does each man receive per year? Ans. $77.50.

If the work is stopped for 90 days, how much money do workmen and employers together lose, if each man averages $2.10 per day? Ans. $21,150.00

The time has come when such scenes as Peabody has witnessed the past few days should not longer be enacted. There should be arbitration at once on the trouble, and some one found who will equitably adjust the difficulty.—Lynn Item.

To all of which we say Amen! This is what we have advocated in the two last issues of this paper. We hope it will be accomplished within a few days.

A gang of roughs visited the house of James Blake at So. Peabody last night and threw stones at the house and broke several lights of glass. Blake is a non-union man and employed by F. Osborne Jr. & Co., and did not leave when the lockout took place.

A non-union man was loading bark at the Central street freight yard yesterday afternoon when he was pulled off the team and otherwise assaulted by a crowd of hoodlums.

About 10 o'clock last night residence of George Goldthwaite of the splitters who returned to work recently was pelted with stones.

Sunday Mass Meeting in Town Hall.

Resolutions Condemning Violence Voted Down.

The congregation worshiping in the South church heard last Sunday morning, among other notices, read from the pulpit one calling for a meeting of the citizens in the Town Hall, at 4.30 P. M. It was also read at the altar in St. John's Church.

Pursuant to this notice there was a large gathering of citizens of all classes in the large Town Hall. Manufacturers were present and their employes, the latter being evidently in a large majority. Promptly at 4. 30 Mr. Edgar W. Upton stepped forward and called the meeting to order, informing the citizens that it was an informal meeting for the purpose of talking over the occurrences of the day previous and to see if they could not be prevented in the future. He nominated Nathan H. Poor as chairman. Several gentlemen were chosen; secretary's Daniel J. Sweeney, Thos. F. Lyons, and William J. McCarthy. It being understood that the two former mentioned gentlemen were not in the hall, Mr. McCarthy came forward and officiated.

Mr. Poor stated that the object of the meeting was to sustain the town officers in their efforts to preserve order, and he called upon any gentleman present to make remarks suggesting suitable measures to be taken.

Edgar W. Upton offered the following resolutions, which he moved be adopted as the sense of the meeting:

WHEREAS, The peace of the town has been troubled by the mischievous action of a mob, and thereby the property of some of our fellow citizens and their lives endangered, be it

RESOLVED, That as citizens of Peabody we condemn utterly any resort to violence as a means of intimidation.

RESOLVED, That we will uphold the officers of the town in any efforts they may make to suppress mob rule and bring the rioters to justice.

Mr. Upton said he thought there could be but one mind as to the sentiments contained in the resolutions. It is extremely important that the hands of the officers of the town should be upheld, and any further trouble like yesterday be prevented. A mob may start from a few boys, but is soon taken up by men and women. Anything of the kind in the future should be stopped. He didn't want to see any mobs in town. He hoped the motion would prevail.

John McCue here rose and said: There won't be any peaceful settlement as long as there is a scab within the limits of Peabody.

This statement was received with great cheering, amid calls of "question."

Mr. Wm. J. McCarthy, from his place as Secretary on the platform, said that the meeting was a fair representative gathering of the citizens of the town. He would like to hear from some of the manufacturers. He happened to be near one of them when the scabs were being driven through the Square who said to the speaker, "Do you know any of them?" Mr. McCarthy said he believed in moral suasion and he would say to that manufacturer, who was present, that he was acquainted with some eight or ten of them. He would like to have the manufacturers show their hand. No one could say that he had not been a law abiding citizen. He did not intend to be driven out of town, but to remain here. He thought it was the first duty of the workmen to behave themselves. He did not believe in mobs, but he wanted the men from out of town to stay away until the difficulties had been settled. When that was done he would shake hands with any of them and bid them welcome. This meeting was called, as he understood, by the Law and Order League. They are the men who want to keep peace. If they want something worse than this, let them apopt these resolutions. He was here as a citizen of the town: there was no district executive board to advise them, but as citizens they were ready to settle the difficulty now.

There were loud calls of "question" and it was put by Mr. Poor, and the resolutions were voted down by a tremendous negative vote.

Mr. Upton said he didn't think the majority who voted "no" understood the resolutions. There was no trap about them. They were as harmless as a cup of weak tea. He hoped some amendment, meaning the same thing, would be proposed which would be satisfactory to the men who voted "no." They were not here to discuss the labor question. That has nothing to do with it. The question was, "Do you think there ought to be mobs in town?"

To this there was a quick and hearty response "Yes."

Mr. Upton did not think on consideration they would say they quite meant that. He moved to adjourn, which was carried by an unanimous vote.

HELD FOB THE HIGHER COURT.

Considerable interest centered in the case of Jeremiah Bresnehan, Patrick Clark, John Halloran, Dennis Bowles, James Carney and Hugh J. Flaherty, all of whom had been arrested for taking a part in the labor riot of last Saturday, and came before Judge Merrill this morning. Chas. H. Simonds of Salem appeared for the defendants and Henry Wardwell for the Commonwealth.

After reading the complaints Mr. Simonds moved that the cases against Bresnehan, Flaherty and Clark be dismissed on the ground that there was no such crime as charged. This the judge refused to do.

Chief Peasley was the first witness. He said that about quarter of twelve o'clock he saw crowds going up Foster street from the square. He followed them up; some stopped in front of Wiley & Poor's and others went further up the street. When he got as far as Andrew Jacobs' there were probably 500 people in the vicinity. He then saw a bark team in front of F. Osborne Jr. & Co's. factory loading up with men. The crowd was howling and hooting, and he heard Halloran cry out "Come on fellows lets down that team;" he heard him repeat it, and stepped up to to him and said "Jack, don't try to have any trouble here, " and he replied "we stand for our rights" at the same time Patrick Clark took up the cry "we are going to down that team." As soon as the team started the rocks began to fly and the crowd to follow calling "scab" and other names. Mr. Peasley did not see any one hit but saw a dozen or more stones strike the team while it was in sight of him. He followed as fast as he could and got a team and with officer Crowley went up to Bowditch Court where the crowd had gone and where the disturbance was going on. He saw Dennis Bowles throw a stone toward the house of Oscar Fellows. Officer Crowley grabbed him and Bowles had another stone in his hand. When the arrest was made the crowd cried "let him go," "let's take him away" and made similar remarks. He told them that they had better not undertake it as it would be the worse for them. He noticed Halloran and Clark in the crowd and said to the former "John, I spoke to you on Foster street and I meant it." He replied "you know what I said to you." The officer said he saw nine lights of glass broken in Fellow's house also the blinds broken. Bowles was removed by Officers Crowley and Preston and the crowd remained perhaps fifteen minutes longer. During the trouble he saw Fellows at the gate with a revolver in his hands. He first saw Carney on Central street about 1 o'clock. The crowd came up to where the team started after dinner and when it reached Osborne's yard there were probably 200 people there all crying and howling. He told the crowd to fall back but Bresnehan refused and he arrested him. Flaherty was another who refused to fall back when he told him to and said: "I be d—d if I do" and repeated it. He arrested the men for disturbing the peace and taking part in the riot.

Officer Crowley's testimony was the same as that of Peasley; he said that Bowles said when he arrested him, that he only threw one stone that struck on the corner of the house. He also saw Holloran and Clark in the crowd on the square. Bowles claimed that he was struck, and wanted me to arrest the man with the revolver.

Officer Barnaby testified to the doings of the crowd, and to being present at the arrest of Flaherty, and heard the conversation as testified to by Peasley.

Chas. L. Osborne, son of Franklin Osborne. said he was there when the men entered the team. Two of the men were from Osborne's and some from Warren Wilson's and Joseph Poor's. He was in a carriage, and followed the bark team as fast as he could, with the crowd between them.

Oscar Fellows said he hired the Holman house on Bowditch Court; he was there when the men came home, stones were thrown and 30 lights of glass broken, beside one sash and two blinds He saw the officers arrest Bowles; the glass had been broken before this time, although the whole thing was done inside of two minutes.

Officer Sweeney was riding down from Central street with Mr. Poor, when he saw Carney throw a stone toward the team containing the non-union men, was positive of it, Carney was on the sidewalk at the time.

This closed the evidence, and counsel for the defence, Mr. Symonds, after condemning such gatherings, argued that it was not a riot, and said in case of Carney it was only a assault, and hoped only a small penalty might be imposed. Flaherty and Bresnehan were arrested for refusing to move on and they should not be charged with riot, but simply a disturbance of the peace, and the same was true of Halloran and Clark, and he hoped the Court would find there had been no riot, but simply a disturbance of the peace.

Mr. Wardwell claimed there was a riot, and said that within the meaning of the law, three only were required to make a riot, while here, there were more than a thousand. The violation of law was in disturbing the peace; attempting to deter workmen from going to work; misdemeanor on a boarding house; and assault on men on their way to work. It was an exaggerated form of a riot, most deplorble for the town and the defendants.

Judge Merrill said there was no doubt of a riot, and he clearly defined the law concering the case. He then held Jeremiah Bresnehan, Patrick Clark, John Halloran and Hugh Flaherty, charged with disturbance of the peace and taking part in a riotous and turbulent assembly in the sum of $500 for their appearance before the Superior Court at Lawrence to be held on the first Monday of October next. James Carney for assault on an unknown person was fined $10 and costs, and Dennis Bowles charged with throwing stones at a dwelling house was fined $20 and costs. The bail was furnished and the cases of Carney and Bowles appealed and they were held in the sum of $100.

SPARKS.

The Board of Engineers held their regular meeting last Wednesday evening and voted to give leave to S. F. E. Co No. 2 to alter their by-laws regarding the time of holding their meetings. W. F. Munroe was approbated as a substitute in this company. The bills of firemen for services in fighting brush fires and other bills were approved. It was also voted to procure a gong for Steamer 2. Nathan P. Beckett was approbated as a member of Steamer 1. Engineer Southwick was authorized to procure tin dippers for the Central Station. Voted that the matter of blowing steam whistles in case of fire be left with the committee on fire alarm, Messrs. Johnson, Southwick and Reed.

Hose 3 was called out last Wednesday evening about 10 o'clock by Engineer Tibbetts on a still alarm, to put out a fire in a lot of grease barrels in the pond hole in the rear of Berry street. A hydrant stream was put on.

Engineer Tibbetts measured the distances between the hydrants on Holly and Liberty streets and the Gardner residence on Margin street last Wednesday afternoon. It was found that the hydrant on Liberty street was just 2700 feet from the gate leading into the yard at Henry Gardner's house, and the hydrant at the corner of Holly and North street was 1688 feet, or just 1012 feet nearer.

Chief Engineer Buxton is confined to his house by a trouble with one of his knees, and it is thought that he will have to go to the hospital in Boston for treatment. The injury is of long standing and was brought on again by running to the alarm at the Gardner farm.

A detail of four firemen from each company were kept in the fire stations last Saturday night owing to the increased risk of fires, and extra men have been on duty at the Central Station through the last few days. Quite a number of the firemen have been sworn in as special policemen.

A special meeting of the Relief Association will be held at the Central Station, Thursday evening, at 7.30, for the purpose of electing a director representing Steamer 1.

The Directors will hold their regular quarterly meeting directly after the Association meeting.

By a mistake of the operator, who caught his finger in the hook while pressing the button, the electric fire alarm gave two srtokes to-day at 11.45, instead of one.

"It has just been learned that in Washington Territory there are just as many women who vote for license as for prohibition."

This statement is not proved by the facts. The W. T. local option law is new. Although six of the largest towns went for license, so many places declared for no-license that the territory gave a prohibition majority. Women voted as generally as did men and as intelligently and morally. Rev. Louis A. Banks, until quite recently a citizen of W. T., says in the Boston Journal that from his own personal knowledge, in no State or Territory has temperance sentiment and legislation made such rapid advance as in W. T., during the past three years that women have been enfranchised.

The following Haverhill officers arrived Monday and remained until the arrival of Chief Wade and the state force yesterday afternoon. Acting Marshal, Charles H. Grant; Patrolmen, Andrew F. Shaw, Edward S. Kimball, Alden M. Worcester, James W. Harris, Lewis H. Donovan, Richard O. Jordan, Eugene O. Bolduc and Charles O. Wormwood. The officers were in full uniform of the Haverhill police, black helmets, long coats, belts and billies.

Mr. Timothy Desmond has returned after an absence of 31 days, and refuses to talk about his exile.

OUR GREAT SALE

PROVES TO BE

A Triumphant Success!

Hundreds of customers at the counters before the usual morning displays had been arranged. Departments crowded all day and the store closed twenty minutes before the last customer went out!

A CARD.

The importance and magnitude of our great purchase and sale of a surplus wholesale stock in these times of depression in business must be so apparent to every one, that it is almost needless to call attention to it. It is impossible to convey in a few words any description of the stock, but it is undoubtedly the best value and in the best condition of any stock ever offered in this manner. The lots are large, very large, but experience has taught us that no matter how big the purchase, it can easily be sold, provided the goods are of the PRESENT SEASON'S MANUFACTURE AND IMPORTATION, AND THE PRICES ARE LOW ENOUGH. The work necessary to take our semi-annual inventory on Friday and then be ready for this sale on Monday was great, very great, but it was all accomplished in the most satisfactory manner. Our shelves and counters, were so full of goods as to be impossible to find room for all the goods at once, hence we could only open a part at a time. This lot sold, more will be added each day. The following among other comments will convey some idea of the sale to those who were not able to attend yesterday:

"I have seen many bargain sales, but this is the only REAL ONE I ever saw. It is all Bargains."

"A big crowd and a nice class of people!"

"People waiting to get at the counters!"

"Never saw such a big crowd!"

"Everybody pleased!"

"Prices are fearfully low!"

"The Bargains are even more than advertised!"

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ESSEX SS.

To the Heirs-at-Law, and others interested in the estate of EDWARD SHERRY, late of Peabody, in said County, laborer, deceased, GREETING:

WHEREAS, James Sherry, Administrator of the estate of said deceased, has presented to said Court his petition for license to sell the whole of the real estate therein described of said deceased, for the payment of debts and charges of administration, and for other reasons set forth in said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be holden at Salem, in said County, on the first Monday of September next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same; And said Administrator is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esq., Judge of said Court, this nineteenth day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

A CARD.

In the half sheet advertisement sent out by us through Essex County, we mention a lot of Dr. Warner's Flexible hip and Nursing Corsets, which the manufacturers have refused to let us sell at less than regular prices, and have taken the goods off our hands,

We publish this card to revoke that part of our advertisement, and assure the ladies that something equally as good will be put in their place.

AYER'S SUGAR CATHARTIC COATED PILLS CURE

Headache, Nausea, Dizziness, and Drowsiness. They stimulate the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels, to healthy action, assist digestion, and increase the appetite. They combine cathartic, diuretic, and tonic properties of the greatest value, are a purely vegetable compound, and may be taken with perfect safety, either by children or adults. E. L. Thomas, Framingham, Mass., writes: "For a number of years I was subject to violent Headaches, arising from a disordered condition of the stomach and bowels. About a year ago I commenced the use of Ayer's Pills, and have not had a headache since." W. P. Hannah, Gormley P. O., York Co., Ont., writes: "I have used Ayer's Pills for the last thirty years, and can safely say that I have never found their equal as a cathartic medicine. I am never without them in my house." C. D. Moore, Elgin, Ill., writes: "Indigestion, Headache, and Loss of Appetite, had so weakened and debilitated my system, that I was obliged to give up work. After being under the doctor's care for two weeks, without getting any relief, I began taking Ayer's Pills. My appetite and strength returned, and I was soon enabled to resume my work, in perfect health."

PEOPLE'S COLUMN.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—Knowing that the PRESS is always ready to publish a communication on local issues I take the liberty to send you the following as my idea of the Manufacturers' statement:

"Considerable interest is aroused in the present labor trouble by the appearance of the Manufacturers' manifesto, an article which will occupy considerable of an person's time to clearly satisfy himself of its purport. That it is any attempt to arouse public sympathy in Chas. Harrington & Co.'s behalf, some may be led to believe; but it is the opinion of many that the manufacturers, recognizing their mistake in precipitating the present trouble over so trifling a matter, in order to lend even the semblance of justice to their case, see fit to embody all the events that have transpired during the last year, (and which have been almost without exception satisfactorily settled) in one common grievance and thereby magnify the present trouble as much as possible. But some who have interested themselves in this matter, believe they can see through the "thin veneering" and believe it is a carefully laid plan to seize upon the present as the most auspicious time to influence the market in their own behalf, a very legitimate undertaking, provided however, they assume the responsibility of it themselves and not, as it looks to me, attempt to foist upon the people the responsibility of the present labor troubles.

I don't say this is undeniable, but their action followed so closely upon the heels of various meetings of Leather Manufacturers held in Boston lately, that one can hardly believe but that what transpired there was other than of a social nature, no one being admitted outside the organization, not even representatives of the press. The Manufacturers say that, "the spirit and rights of American citizens to have something to say as to the carrying on of their own business, was going to assert itself". That the men from whom the manifesto emanated have some right to the claim of American citizens is true, but their share in a figurative sense is in proportion to the weight of their claim. We, (you see I am one myself,) reserve a slice of that article for those that are coming after us, so we must be all satisfied with our share when we get it. Did I need proof of the rights of the 2000 men that are walking the streets to-day, through no fault of their own, I would accept the rule as laid down by the manufacturers, and cheerfully acquiesce. That rule will apply to the men as well as to the manufacturers. The former go into the market the same as the Manufacturers do, the only difference between them is, that the commodity each have for sale is of two different natures, one is Labor, the other Capital, therefore he is entitled to the same right that the manufacturers reserves for himself viz: the right to have a voice in the management of his own affairs.

It may be said that it is a rule in all business, to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market, and if any man is not satisfied with the wages he is receiving, he is at liberty to try and do better. The very essence of liberty is the contentment of a people, and if that contentment can only exist where a people are living for the common good of all the community, how essential is it that those principles the Manufacturers profess, should be put in practice. In speaking with a manufacturer, and member of the Association a day or two ago, I asked what was the trouble between him and his men; he said that he had no greivance with his men, but the orders of the Association were "to shut up shop and I did it." This certainly shows a decidedly arbitrary spirit to say the least. When this trouble originated, it was understood that the trouble hinged on a question as to the number of hours tanners should work for a day's pay. But it will be seen from the last declaration of the Manufacturers that they have resolved it into another question of very much larger scope in the endeavor to present a justifiable argument of their side of the present trouble. Let us hope there will soon be reached a speedy settlement in this matter, and that dictation is not all on one side, and that there are always two sides to all great issues.

WOODBURY'S ANTIDOTE,

To restore lost appetite, is the next th air or an ocean voyage. Drugg

Be Warned

in time. Kidney diseases may be prevented by purifying, renewing, and invigorating the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. When, through debility, the action of the kidneys is perverted, these organs rob the blood of its needed constituent, albumen, which is passed off in the urine, while worn out matter, which they should carry off from the blood, is allowed to remain. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the kidneys are restored to proper action, and Albuminuria, or

Bright's Disease

is prevented. Ayer's Sarsaparilla also prevents inflammation of the kidneys, and other disorders of these organs. Mrs. Jas. W. Weld, Forest Hill st., Jamaica Plain, Mass., writes: "I have had a complication of diseases, but my greatest trouble has been with my kidneys. Four bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla made me feel like a new person; as well and strong as ever." W. M. McDonald, 46 Summer st., Boston, Mass., had been troubled for years with Kidney Complaint. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, he not only the disease from assuming a fatal form, but was restored to perfect health. John McLellan, cor. Bridge and Third sts., Lowell, Mass., writes: "For several years I suffered from Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint, the latter being so severe at times that I could scarcely attend to my work. My appetite was poor, and I was much emaciated; but by using my appetite and digestion improved, and my health has been perfectly restored."

Prevented

F. D. TARLTON,

42 MAIN STREET, PEABODY.

Lynn, July 31st, 1886.

WELLMAN OSBORNE:

Dear Sir—I have watched with interest the great excitement caused by your Grand- Closing-Out Sale and have decided to allow you fifteen days more in which to follow, to a successful conclusion the remarkable sale so auspiciously begun.

My plans are all perfected and I shall have to commence operations at once, in the rear of the two stores occupied by Mr. Babb and yourself, but I will try to hinder you as little as possible. I am glad that the people have "come to the rescue so nobly" shown by the large crowds, (of which I was a witness,) that surged into your store last Saturday night. It shows that they appreciate the great opportunity you are giving them. I wish you continued success.

Your Friend,
T. E. PARKER.

CRAYON ARTIST & PHOTOGRAPHER,
252 Essex Street, Salem.

Having refitted and refurnished our gallery with new Lenses, Cameras, Backgrounds, Accessories, etc., etc., and having one of the largest and finest operating rooms and skylights in the country, we now have facilities second to none for doing first class work in all branches of Photography.

We have just purchased the finest instruments obtainable for making pictures from 8x10 to 24x24 (full life size) direct from the sitter, and make them either bust, half or full length, or groups. To introduce them we shall make them very low for three months.

We have special facilities for copying old and faded Photographs, Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, etc. Before giving your pictures to agents, come to us, and see our samples and get our prices. You can save money and at the same time get better work and not risk the breaking or losing of your pictures in the mails.

We make a specialty of Life Size Free Hand Crayons, made from any kind of picture or from life. One of the advantages, not to speak of the superior artistic qualities, of free hand work over the mechanically finished solars, is that any changes from the original, no matter how great, can be easily made, whereas in the finished solar but very slight changes can be made. We can furnish duplictaes from any negative ever taken by N. C. Bosuley.

Call and see what we are doing, all will be treated courtesy whether anythiug is desired or not.

The Young Idea.

Florence, aged 4, demanded as her perquisite the wishbone of every fowl brought into the house. One day she was carefully arranging her collection when her father came into the room. "Fader," she said, looking up—"fader, is you doin' to die?" "Why, yes, Florence, we must all die some time," he said, touched by her earnest look. "Fader, when you does die, may I have your wishbone?"—Rome Sentinel.

A CASE OF PRE-EMPTION.

"Oh! ain't you mean," said one 6-year-old to the other. "You took the biggest cake. I was just going to take it myself."—Life.

JUST SPANK HER.

"Mamma, didn't you say if this dolly got broke, somebody'd have to be spanked?" "Yes, I did." "Well, dolly broke her head to-day. Just spank her."—Chicago News.

FULL EXPLANATION.

The polite child is the latest in the juvenile world. She was strolling around the neighborhood on a tour of observation, when she came across a colored man sitting on a doorstep. She stood with her finger in her mouth looking at him. Finally she said: "You're a colored man, ain't you?" "You are a very polite little girl," he said. "Yes, I am a colored man." "Oh, yes; I'm very polite. I call every nigger I see a colored man."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Nearly as Bad.

He was making his first call, and all the formalities of the season were in full blast. She toyed with her fan as she conversed about the gayeties of the winter time. Leisurely strolling into the elegant drawing room came the family dog, a large and intelligent type of the Newfoundland breed. It was a warm evening and the dog came in with his mouth open and his tongue protruding from his mouth. He made directly for the hostess, who manifested great uneasiness at the first sight of the unexpected animal. As he came nearer the young woman dropped her fan, mounted first the heavy upholstered chair and then the centre table.

Seeing the unusual performance, the young man followed suit and was soon on top of the marble mantelpiece, to which place of safety he invited his hostess. Meanwhile the dog, the cause of the commotion, crawled under the sofa, preparing himself to take a nap.

"When was he taken?" asked the young man, as he balanced himself amid the mantel ornaments.

"Oh, he's been that way all summer," replied the young woman.

"It's strange he doesn't try to bite us, isn't it?" continued the young man.

"Oh, he wouldn't bite anybody," remarked the young hostess.

"Why, hasn't he got the hydrophobia?"

"No," replied she, "he's got fleas, and that's pretty near as bad."—St. Paul Globe.

Soul-Stirring Eloquence.

Old Col. Zell, at the time when Grant was up for the presidency and when the Democratic watchword was "Anything to beat Grant," was addressing an enthusiastic meeting of Comstock Republicans, when a Democrat, who was "hanging on to the verge of the crowd," sang out, "It's easy talkin', colonel, but we'll show you something next fall."

The colonel was a southern Union man of the ultra school and a great admirer of Grant. He at once wheeled about, and with uplifted hands, hair bristling, and eyes flashing fire, cried out: "Build a worm fence round a winter supply of summer weather; skim the clouds from the sky with a teaspoon; catch a thunderbolt with a bladder; break a hurricane to harness; ground sluice an earthquake; bake hell in an ice house; lasso an avalanche; fix a clout on the crater of an active volcano; hive all the stars in a nail keg; hang out the ocean on a grapevine to dry; put the sky to soak in a gourd; unbuckle the belly band of eternity and paste 'To Let' on the sun and moon, but never, sir—never for a moment delude yourself with the idea that you can beat Grant!"—Salt Lake Tribune.

A Heart For Any Fate.

"Erastus," said a citizen to a colored man on the market, "you live out on Prospect street, don't you?"

"Yes sah."

"I've rented that five-acre field this side of the railroad tracks, and I did think of planting it all to watermelons."

"Yes, sah. Dat would be a boss speckulashun, sah. Dat's de bes' groun' in de hull state fur watermelyons. Bein I lib clus by I'll watch de field fur you."

"While I did think of planting it to melons, as I said, I've concluded to use it all for potatoes. I hope you are not disappointed, Erastus?"

"Oh, no, no, sah. I'ze allus bin about ekally divided 'tween 'taters an' melyons."—Detroit Free Press.

Playing House as He Understood It.

Mother—Why, Harry, you haven't got through playing house down on the beach, have you?

Harry—Yes'm.

Mother—What's the matter? Didn't you have a good time?

Harry—No'm; that Carrie Judson is a mean old thing. She wouldn't fight a bit like you and papa; and when I hit her on the head she cried. She's no fun.—Tid-Bits.

Lions B. C.

The regular lecturer to the panorama being ill, his assistant behind the scenes, a Hibernian, officiated in that capacity one night.

Lecturer—This movin' scane, gintlemen and ladies, represints "Daniel in the Lions' Den." This is Daniel betwixt the lions.

Auditor—Be them wild lions or circus lions?

Lecturer—I pity the ignorance of the like of yez, sor. This was B. C., before circuses. —Texas Siftings.

Prof. Grothe, Brooklyn Board of Health, says Red Star Cough Cure is free from opiates, and highly efficacious. Twenty-five cents.

Half of the world doesn't know how the other half cheats.

My friend, look here! you know how weak and nervous your wife is, and you know that Carter's Iron Pills will relieve her, now why not be fair about it and buy her a box?

Paper is about to monopolize another branch of industry —that of gentlemen's head gear. By a new process hats, more serviceable and finer in appearance than anything now in the market, are now made of wood pulp. They are impervious to water and not wanting in flexibility. It is believed that felt hats will have to take a back seat as soon as these new hats can be placed on the market in sufficient numbers to supply the demand.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla never before equaled its present daily record of marvelous cures and immense sales.

Nothing is easier than to grow rich. It is only to trust nobody; to befriend none; heap interest upon interest, cent upon cent; to destroy all the finer feelings of nature, and be rendered mean, miserable and despised for some twenty or thirty years and riches will come as sure as disease, disappointment and a miserable death.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mrs. Susan E. wife of Mr. Charles W. Davis, died at her home at South Peabody last Thursday morning. She had been sick for nearly a year with consumption and no hopes of her recovery had been entertained by her family for several months. She bore her long sickness with patience. She was 23 years and six months old. A husband and infant child survive her. Her funeral took place Sunday afternoon, Rev. J. W. Colwell officiating.

Mr. R. P. Brown has gone to Ohio after a car load of horses.

Mrs. Warren Pike of Philadephia, is stopping with her sisters on County street.

Rev. J. W. Colwell commenced his three weeks vacation last Monday. He will probably spend the most of it at his wife's home at Andover, Mass.

Mrs. Frank Needham started for Yarmouth N. S. last Tuesday, to be away several months.

Mr. Everett Shaw has removed to Plastow, N. H. Mr. Chas. Merrow starting to-day with his goods, over the road.

There will be no afternoon services a the church the next two weeks.

Mr. Sylvanus Newhall and sister have gone to the mountains for a two weeks sojourn.

Mr. Nathaniel Putnam carried a large party of berry pickers to Ipswich, to-day.

The men walked through the Square this morning and noon, at the desire of Chief Wade, who assured them that they would not be harmed. There was no disturbance, and very few people on the Square, scarcely more than on ordinary days.

TWO LETTERS.

"My darling wife," (he writes), "come home;
  I cannot do without you.
Throughout these gloomy rooms I roam;
  My thoughts are all about you.

"But if you think it best to stay,
  Why, do so—perhaps you'd better.
Don't think of me at all, I pray"—
  And thus winds up the letter.

Quickly a smile goes o'er his face,
  As in the ink again he dips.
"Dear John," (he writes), "you know the place,
  And don't forget to bring the chips."
—Tom Masson, in New York Sun.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

I asked my love to row with me
  Upon the moonlit lake;
And, far from shore, where none could see,
  I tried a kiss to take.

She promptly boxed my ears, and so
  We're on bad terms just now,
I thought we'd have a pleasant row—
  Instead, we had a row.

THE TRIALS OF FARMING.

"I can't imagine what the trouble is with that cow," said a New Yorker, who is giving his attention to amateur farming this season. "She looks all right," commented a neighbor. "Yes, she looks all right," agreed the New Yorker, "but the doocid critter won't give down her milk. When I bought her a month ago she gave twenty-four quarts a day; now I'm lucky to get five. And it isn't because she doesn't get milked often enough," added the puzzled amateur. "Not a day passes I don't milk that cow half a dozen times, at least."—New York Sun.

CHAPTER 317, ACTS OF 1886.

An Act in Relation to the Inspection and Sale of Imitation Butter,

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:—

SECTION 1. Section seventeen of chapter fifty-six of the Public Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:—Whoever, by himself or his agents, sells, exposes for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, any article, substance or compound, made in imitation or semblance of butter or as a substitute for butter, and not made exclusively and wholly of milk or cream, or containing any fats, oil or grease not produced from milk or cream, shall have the words,—imitation butter,—or if such substitute is the compound known as—oleomargarine,—then the word—oleomargarine,—or if it is known as—butterine,—then the word—butterine,—stamped, labelled or marked in a straight line in printed letters of plain, uncondensed Gothic type, not less than one-half inch in length, so that said words cannot be easily defaced, upon the top, side and bottom of every tub, firkin, box or package containing any of said article, substance or compound. The said stamp, label or mark shall contain no other words. And whoever, by himself or his agents, exposes or offers for sale any of the said article, substance or compound, not in the original package, shall attach to the said article, substance or compound, in a conspicuous place, a label bearing the words,—imitation butter—oleomargarine,—or—butterine, as the article may be, in printed letters of plain, uncondensed Gothic type, not less than one-half inch in length. And in case of retail sales of any of said article, substance or compound not in the original packages, the seller shall, by himself or his agents, attach to each package so sold, and shall deliver therewith to the purchaser, a label or wrapper bearing in a conspicuous place upon the outside of the package the words,—imitation butter,—oleomargarine,—or butterine,—and no other words, in printed letters in a straight line of plain, uncondensed Gothic type, not less than one-half inch in length.

SECT. 2. Section nineteen of chapter fifty-six of the Public Statutes is amended so as to read as follows:—Whoever sells, exposes for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, any article, substance or compound made in imitation or semblance or butter or cheese, or a substitute for butter or cheese, except as provided in the two preceding sections, and whoever, with intent to deceive, defaces, or erases, cancels or removes any mark, stamp, brand, label or wrapper provided for in said sections, or in any manner shall falsely label, stamp or mark any box, tub, article or package marked, stamped or labelled as aforesaid, shall for every such offence forfeit to the city or town where the offence was committed one hundred dollars, and for a second and each subsequent offence two hundred dollars.

SECT. 3. Whoever, by himself or his agents, sells, exposes for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, any article, substance or compound, made in imitation or semblance of butter, or as a substitute for butter, and not made exclusively and wholly of milk or cream, or containing any fats, oils or grease not produced from milk or cream, contained in any box, tub, article or package, marked or labelled with the word—dairy,—or the word—creamery,—shall for every such offence forfeit to the city or town where the offence was committed one hundred dollars, and for a second and each subsequent offence two hundred dollars.

SECT. 4. Every person who conveys any imitation butter, oleomargarine or butterine in carriages or otherwise, for the purpose of selling the same in any city or town, shall within thirty days of the passage of this act, and annually on the first day of May, or within thirty days thereafter, be licensed by the inspector or inspectors of milk of such city or town to sell the same within the limits thereof, and shall pay to such inspector or inspectors fifty cents to the use of the city or town. The inspector or inspectors shall pay over monthly to the treasurer of such city or town all sums collected by him or them. In towns in which there is no inspector of milk, licenses shall be issued by the town clerk. Licenses shall be issued only in the names of the owners of the carriages or other vehicles, and shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be conclusive evidence of ownership. No license shall be sold, assigned or transferred. Each license shall record the name, residence, place of business, number of carriage or other vehicles used, the name and residence of every driver or other person engaged in carrying or selling imitation butter, oleomargarine or butterine, and the number of the license. Each licensee shall, before engaging in the sale of any of the articles as aforesaid, cause his name, the number of his license and his place of business to be legibly placed on each outer side of all carriages or vehicles used by him in the conveyance of the articles aforesaid, in Gothic letters not less than one inch in length, and he shall report to the inspector or inspectors any change of driver or other person employed by him which may occur during the term of his license. Whoever, without being first licensed under the provisions of this section, sells any of the articles as aforesaid, or exposes or offers them for sale from carriages or other vehicles, or has them in his custody or possession with intent to sell, and whoever violates any of the provisions of this section shall, for a first offence, be punished by a fine of not less than thirty nor more than one hundred dollars; for a second offence, by a fine of not less than fifty nor more than three hundred dollars.

SECT. 5. Every person before selling or offering for sale any of the said articles in a store, booth, stand or market-place in a city or in a town in which an inspector or inspectors of milk are appointed, shall within thirty days of the passage of this act, and annually, on the first day of May, or within thirty days thereafter, register in the books of such inspector or inspectors, or, if there be no inspector, then in the books of the town clerk, and shall pay to him or them fifty cents to the use of such city or town; and whoever neglects to so register shall be so punished for each offence by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars.

SECT. 9. This act shall take effect upon its passage. [APPROVED JUNE 23, 1886.]

C. A. SANGER
7 LOWELL STREET,
UP STAIRS.

Mr. T. W. Shephard, of the Standard Thermometer Works, made a trip from Peabody to Saxonville, a distance of 45 miles, last Saturday evening in five hours.

The following from a lady reader is said to be a sure way of getting rid of the buffalo bugs:—First close up all the openings in the room, even to cevering the key-hole, and then take a pan of live coals and set it in the middle of the room, placing upon the coals several pieces of roll brimstone. As the sulphur fumes penetrate the cracks and crevices in the floor and other parts of the room the pests come out for air and fall dead." The lady says it never fails to entirely free the room of the bugs.

Miss Alice Freeman, the president of Wellesley, writes a correspondent, is in herself a glorious example of what a woman may become. Small and slight and handsome, only 28 years of age, she has mastered thoroughly seven languages, all the sciences, and won the right to stand beside any professor on earth as president of a college. She is too modest and unassuming to take any boastful stand, however, and only poses as a savant in the natural way that occasionally comes to her as the president of Wellesley.

E. Moody Boynton of greenback fame, is out with another new idea. He proposes to run trains 120 miles an hour and have no accidents. Cars and engines are to be light, narrow and cheap, and run between rails, one at the top and one at the bottom. Cars three feet wide and 20 ft. high would carry an immense amount of freight, and if coal or ore, could readily be unloaded at the bottom. The scheme is to use one rail of the present railroad tracks, build another above it and make trains hum. Cars cannot get off the track, and accidents would only occur from collisions, obstructions or destruction. There is presumably little vibration or jar and if electric motors are used no smoke or cinders.

It will probably be a week or more before the poll tax bills are ready, and until they are ready the collector is not anxious to have people call to pay them, although nobody's money will be refused.

The money to meet the weekly pay roll of the Danvers Bleachery is so heavy that a clerk can't carry it and it is loaded on to a truck wagon from the bank. That is one advantage of silver legislation.

The summer is the barbers' harvest time, especially in well located shops. People get shaved and have their hair cut oftener than in cold weather, and the money that comes in for shampooing and other hot-weather extras makes a marked difference in the receipts. And then there are more people traveling in summer than winter, and the average man will not be on the road very long before he steers for a barber's shop. The proprietor of one of our barber shops says that his income up to the time of the lockout was $25 more than in the winter.

The Old Home.

It stands upon the hillside, with the tall elms bending o'er it,
The homestead, with the lilacs by the door.
And the quaint old fashioned garden gently sloping down before it,
I see it just as in the days of yore.

I remember how the sunshine fell across the golden meadows,
Beyond the wooden doorstep, old and worn;
And how the summer cloudlets cast their quickly fleeting shadows
On distant fields of rustling, ripening corn.

In the pleasant, roomy kitchen I see my father sitting,
With leather-covered Bible open wide;
While my sweet-faced mother listens, as she lays away her knitting,
And rocks the old red cradle by her side.

Three brown-eyed little children, with tangled golden tresses,
When evening prayer in simple words is said,
Come clinging round her neck with loving, soft caresses;
Then merrily go tripping off to bed.

O happy years of childhood, with thoughts so true and loving,
And sweet and guileless days so full of rest!
Our old hearts love to linger, after all our years of roving,
And clasp fond memry's pictures to our breast.

Shall we ever in that country, the bright and glorious heaven,
Win back the simple innocence and bliss
We knew when, in our childhodd, in the dear old home at even,
We received our angel mother's good night kiss?

Would Make Things Lively.

If I were a railroad brakeman
I'd holler the stations so plain
That the man who was going to Texas
Would go clear through to Maine.
I'd open the door of the smoking car
And I'd give such a mighty roar
That the passengers back in the sleeper
Would all fall out on the floor;
For I couldn't afford a tenor voice,
And I couldn't afford to speak
In the sweet, soft tones of Æolian harps
For eleven dollars a week.

If I were a baggage master
I'd rattle the trunks about;
I'd stand them up in the corner
And I'd tear their bowels out.
I would pull the handles out by the roots,
I would kick their corners in,
And strew their stuffing all round the car,
And make them lank and thin.
For I couldn't afford to wear kid gloves
Nor put soft pads on my feet,
Nor to handle things gently when all my pay
Just keeps me in bread and meat.

If I were a railroad conductor,
As through the train I'd go,
I'd have for every question they'd ask
This answer all ready: "Don't know."
I'd miss connections for lots of men,
I'd run lone passengers past;
I'd tell them 'twas eight when I knew 'twas ten,
And I'd swear their watches were fast.
For I couldn't afford to be civil
When I knew every man in the load
Would look at my watch and ring and say
"He stole them things from the road."

Selected Story.

A Second Thought.

THE STORY OF A WIFE'S GOOD SENSE.

I must have it, George, said Mr. Whitman's handsome little wife. So don't put on that sober face.

Did I put on a sober face? asked the husband, with an attempt to smile that was anything but a success.

Yes, sober as a man on trial for his life, she replied. There, dear, clear it up, and look as if you had at least one friend in the world. What money-lovers you men are!

How much will it cost? inquired Mr. Whitman.

There was another effort to look cheerful and acquiescent.

About six pounds, was answered, with just a little faltering in the lady's voice, for she knew the sum would sound extravagnt.

Six pounds! Why, Mary, do you think I am made of money?

And Mr. Whitman's countenance under-went a remarkable change of expression.

I declare, George, said his wife, a little impatiently, you look at me as if I were an object of fear instead of affection. I don't think this is kind of you. I've only had three silk dresses since we were married, while Amy Blight has had six or seven during the same period, and every one of hers cost more than mine. I know you think me extravagant, but I wish you had a wife like some women I could name. I rather think you'd find out the difference before long.

There, there, pet, don't talk to me after this fashion! I'll bring you the money this evening, that is, if—

No ifs or buts, if you please. The sentence is complete without them. Thank you, dear! I'll go this afternoon and buy the silk. So don't fail to bring the money. I was in—— street yesterday and saw one of the sweetest pattern I ever beheld. Just suits my style and complexion. I shall be inconsolable if it's gone. You won't disappoint me?

And Mrs. Whitman laid her soft, white hand on the arm of her husband and smiled with sweet persuasion in his face.

Oh, no. You shall have the money, said Mr. Whitman, turning off from his wife, as she thought, a little abruptly, and hurrying from her presence.

In his precipitation he had also forgotten the usual parting kiss.

That's the way it is always! said Mrs. Whitman, her whole manner changing, as the sound of the closing street door came jarring upon her ears. Just say money to George, and at once there is a cloud in the sky.

She sat down pouting and half angry.

Six pounds for a new dress! mentally ejaculated the husband of the vain, pretty and thoughtless Mrs. Whitman, as he shut the door after him. I promised to settle the coal merchant's bill to-day, but don't know where the money is to come from. The coal is nearly out, and more must be ordered. Oh, dear! I'm discouraged. Every year I fall behindhand. This winter I did hope to get a little in advance; but if silk dresses are to be the order of the day, there's an end to that devoutly-to-be-wished-for-circumstance.

Debt—debt! how I have always shrunk from it; but steadily, now, it is overpowering me. Oh, if I could but disentangle myself now, while I have the strength of early manhood; but the bonds that hold me are weak. If Mary could see as I see—if I could only make her understand rightly my position! Alas! that is hopeless, I fear.

And Mr. Whitman quickened his steps because his heart beat quicker and his mind was unduly excited.

Not long after Mr. Whitman had left home, the post man delivered a letter to his address. His wife examined the writing on the envelope, which was in a bold hand, and said to herself as she did so, I wonder who this can be from?

Something more than curiosity moved her. There intruded on her mind a vague feeling of disquiet, as if the missive bore unpleasant news for her husband. The stamp showed it to be a city letter. Several times of late such letters had come to his address, and she noticed that he read them hurriedly, thrust them, without remark into his pocket and—became suddenly silent and gloomy.

Mrs. Whitman turned the letter over again in her hand, in a thoughtful way, and as she did so, the image of her husband, sober-faced and silent as he had become most of the time of late, presented itself with unusual vividness. Sympathy stole into her heart.

Poor George! she said, as the feeling increased; I'm afraid something is going wrong with him.

Placing the letter on the mantlepiece, where her husband could see it when he came in, Mrs. Whitman entered upon some house-hold duties, but a strange impression, as of a weight, lay upon her heart—a sense of impending evil—a vague, troubled disturbance of her usual inward self-satisfaction.

If the thought of Mrs. Whitman recurred, as was natural, to the elegant silk dress of which she was to become the owner on that day, she did not feel the proud satisfaction her vain heart experienced a little while before: Something of its beauty had faded.

If I only knew what that letter contained! she said, half an hour after it had come in, her mind still feeling the pressure which had come upon it so strangely, as it seemed to her.

She went to the mantle-piece took up the letter, and examined the superscription. It did not enlighten her. Steadily she became more assured that its contents were of a nature to trouble her husband.

He's been a little mysterious of late, she said to herself. This idea affected her very unpleasantly. He grows more silent and reserved, she added, as thought, under a kind of feverish excitement, became active in a new direction. More contemplative, as it were, and less interested in what goes on around him. His coldness chills me at times, and his irritation pains me.

She drew a long, deep sigh. Then with an almost startling vividness, came before her mind in contrast, her tender, loving, cheerful husband of three years before, and her quiet, silent, sober-faced husband of to-day.

Something has gone wrong with him this year! she said aloud, as feeling grew stronger. What can it be? The letter was still in her hand. This may enlighten me.

With careful fingers she opened the envelope not breaking the paper so that she could seal it again if she desired to do so. There was a bill of fifteen pounds and a communication from the person sending the bill. He was a jeweler.

If this is not settled at once, he wrote, I shall take proceedings. It has been standing for nearly a year, and I am tired of getting excuses instead of money.

The bill was for a lady's watch, which Mrs. Whitman had almost compelled her husband to purchase.

Not paid for! Is it possible? exclaimed the little woman, in great astonishment, while the blood mounted to her forehead.

Then she sat down to think.

Light began to come into her mind.

As she sat thus thinking, another letter for her husband came in. She opened it without hesitation.

Another bill! and another dunning letter!

Not paid! Is it possible! she repeated.

It was a bill of four pounds for boots and slippers, which had been standing for three or four months.

This will never do! said the astonished wife—never—no, never! She thrust the two letters into her pocket in a resolute way, and from that hour until the return of her husband she did an unusual amount of thinking or her little brain. She saw, the moment he entered, that the morning cloud had not passed from his brow.

Here is the money for that new dress, he said, taking it from his vest pocket and handing it to her as he came in.

He did not kiss her, nor smile in the old bright way. But his voice was calm, if not cheerful. A kiss and a smile just then would have been more precious to the young wife than a hundred silk dresses. She took the money saying, Thank you, dear! It is kind of you to comply with my wishes.

Something in her voice and manner caused Mr. Whitman to lift his eyes to her face with a look of inquiry. But she turned aside, so that he could not read its expression.

He was graver and more silent than usual, and ate with scarcely an appearance of appetite.

Come home early, dear, said Mrs. Whitman, as she walked to the door with her husband.

Are you impatient to have me admire your new silk dress? he asked, with a faint effort to smile.

Yes it will be something splendid, she replied.

He turned off from her quickly, and left the house. A few moments she stood, with a thoughtful countenance, and her whole manner completely changed. Then she went to her room, and commenced dressing to go out. Two hours later, and we find her in the jeweller's shop.

May I speak a word to you? she said, addressing the owner, who knew her very well.

Certainly, he replied, and they moved to the lower end of one of the long glass cases.

Mrs. Whitman drew from her pocket a lady's watch and chain, and laying them on the glass case, said, at the same time holding out the bill she had taken from the envelope addressed to her husband.

I cannot afford to wear this watch; my husband's circumstances are too limited. I tell you so frankly. It should never have been purchased; but a too indulgent husband yielded to the importunities of a foolish young wife. I say this to take the blame from him. Now, sir, meet the case it you can do so in fairness to yourself. Take back the watch, and how much shall I pay you beside.

The jeweller paused a little to think. The case took him a little by surprise. He stood for nearly a minute; then taking the bill and watch, he said, wait a moment, and went to a desk.

Will that do?

He had come forward again, and now presented her with the receipted bill. His face wore a pleased expression.

How much have I to pay you? asked Mrs. Whitman, taking out her pocket-book.

Nothing, he replied. The watch is uninjured.

You have done a kind act, sir, said Mrs. Whitman, with a tremulous voice. I hope you will not think unfavorably of my husband. It's no fault of his that the bill has not been paid. Good morning, sir.

Mrs. Whitman drew her veil over her face, and went with light steps and a light heart from the shop. The pleasure she had experienced on receiving her watch was not to be compared with that she now felt in parting with it. From the jeweller's she went to the bootmaker's and paid his bill; from thence to the milliner's and settled for her last bonnet.

I know you're dying to see my new dress, said Mrs. Whitman, gaily, as she drew her arm within that of her husband on his appearance that evening. Come up stairs and let me show it. Come along! Don't hang back, George, as if you were afraid.

George Whitman went with his wife passively, looking more like a man on his way to receive a dreadful sentence than in expectation of a pleasant sight. His thoughts were bitter.

Shall my wife become lost to me, he said in his heart, lost to me in a world of folly, fashion and extravagance?

Sit down, George, she said, leading him to a chair

Her manner had undergone a change. The brightness of her countenance had departed. She took something in a hurried way from a drawer, and catching up a footstool placed it on the floor near him, and sitting down, leaned upon him, and looked tenderly and lovingly into his face. Then she handed him the jewelier's bill.

It is receipted, you see, she said, and her voice fluttered a little.

Mary! how is this? he asked. What does it mean?

I returned the watch, she replied: and Mr. Ross receipted the bill. I would have paid for any damage, but he said it was uninjured, and would not take anything.

Oh, Mary! said her husband.

And this is receipted also; and this she said handing the other bills which she had paid. And now, dear, she added, quickly, how do you like my dress? Isn't it beautiful?

We leave to the reader's imagination the explanations and the scene that followed. If, however, any fair lady, who, like Mrs. Whitman, has been drawing too heavily on her husband's slender income, for silks and jewels, is at a loss to realize the scene, let her try Mary's experiment, and, our word for it, she will find a new and glad experience in life. Costly silks and jewels may be very pleasant things, but they are to dearly bought when they come as the price of a husband's embarassment, and mental disquietude, or alienation. Take the lesson and live by it, rather than offer another illustration, in your experience, of the folly we have been endeavoring to expose and rebuke.

IT'S ENGLISH, YOU KNOW.

Bill Nye's Endeavor to Introduce His Ancestor's Sport.

SLIPPERY ELMHURST,
HUDSON, Wis., July 18, 1886.

To the Editor of The Globe:

DEAR SIR: Could you inform a constant reader of your valuable paper where he would be most likely to obtain a good, durable, wild fox which could be used for hunting purposes on my premises? I desire a fox that is a good roadster and yet not too bloodthirsty. If I could secure one that would not bite it would tickle me most to death.

You know, perhaps, that I am of English origin. Some of the best and bluest blood of the oldest and most decrepit families in England flows in my veins. There is no better blood extant. We love the exhilarating sports of our ancestors, and nothing thrills us through and through like the free chase across country behind the fleeing fox. Joyously we gallop over the sward behind the yelping pack, as we clearly scent high, low, jack and the game.

My ancestors are haughty English people from Piscataquis county, Maine. For centuries our rich, warm, red blood has been mellowed by the elderberry wine and huckleberry juice of Moosehead lake; but now and then it will assert itself and mantle in the broad and indestructible cheek of our race. Ever and anon in our family you will notice the slender, triangular chest, the broad and haughty sweep of abdomen, and the high, intellectual expanse of pelvic bones, which denotes the true Englishman; proud, high spirited, soaked full of calm disdain, wearing checked pantaloons, and a soft, flabby tourist's hat that has a bow at both ends, so that a man cannot get too drunk to put it on his head straight.

I know that here in democratic America, where every man has to earn his living or marry rich, people will scorn my high-born love of the fox chase, and speak in a slighting manner of my wild, wild yearn for the rush and scamper of the hunt. By Jove, but it is joy indeed to gallop over the sward and the cover and the open land, the meet and the cucumber vines of the plebeian farmer, to run over the wife of the peasant and tramp her low, coarse children into the rich mold.

This shows our superiority as a race. We have been that way for hundreds of years. We could work in order to be sociable, but we would not allow it to sap the foundations of our whole being.

I write, therefore, to learn, if possible, where I can get a good red or gray fox that will come home nights. I had a fox last season for hunting purposes, but he did not give satisfaction. He was constantly getting into the pound. I do not want an animal of that kind. I want one that I shall always know where I can put my hand upon him when I want to hunt.

I would like, also, a tall red horse with a sawed-off tail; one that can jump a barbed wire fence without mussing it up with fragments of his rider. Any one who may have such a horse or pipless fox will do well to communicate with me in person or by letter, inclosing references. I may be found during the summer months on my estate, spread out under a tree, engaged in thought.

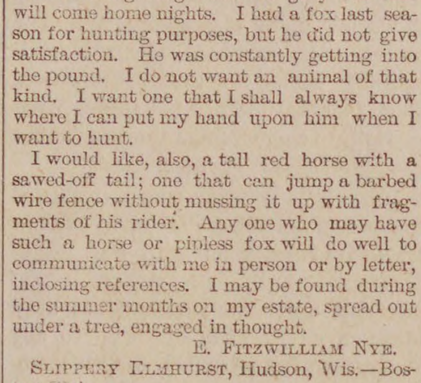
A New Invention.



M'GINNIS' MASK FOR BARBERS.

Hostetter McGinnis and Kusciusko Murphy were talking about one thing and another and at last the conversation drifted to barbers.

Murphy—I've tried a good many different barbers, and my impression is that they cause baldheadedness. They talk their customers baldheaded. They just talk the hair right off their customers' heads. My present barber is the best one I ever had. He has partially lost his voice, and cannot speak above a whisper.

McGinnis—Allow me to congratulate you.

Murphy—There is not much cause for congratulation after all. You ought to hear him whisper. He never stops a minute, and to insure length of life, to himself, of course, he chews garlic. It is almost enough to make a man prefer death, but he has fewer discrepancies than any other barber I ever saw.

McGinnis—It is strange that a barber has not got sense enough to keep his mouth shut. A tonsorial artist, physionomical hair dresser, facial operator, cranium manipulator and capillary abridger by the name of Smith, in New Jersey, who lost his voice entirely, is now doing a rushing business.

Murphy—Is there no remedy?

McGinnis—I think there is. A law should be passed compelling barbers to wear during business hours an iron mask with a chimney that would carry off—not carry on—the conversation. It is impossible to make a barber keep quiet, but I am going to get a patent out for my invention, bribe congress to pass the law, and then my fortune will be made.—Texas Siftings.

A Big Jump.

"One day about two weeks ago," said Mr. John T. Sullivan, "I was on a ferryboat crossing over from Detroit. We had just cast off the ropes when an Irishman rushed through the gate, threw down his money, and waved his fist.

"'Howld on! howld on!' he shouted.

"'Jump! jump!' we shouted.

"The boat was barely three feet from the dock, and he could have stepped across the chasm. He stepped back, took a run, and made an awkward leap. He made it, but he landed on a banana peel which lay on the deck, and before he stopped rolling he was in the forward part of the boat. When he got up and brushed off his clothes the boat was fifty feet from the shore. Looking at the stretch of water he slapped his thigh and exclaimed, proudly:

"Begorra! what a lep!"—Chicago News.

His Future Assured.

"I guess I'm pretty safe about going to heaven," remarked Bobby to young Mr. Featherly.

Mr. Featherly replied that he earnestly hoped so, and then inquired why Bobby felt so confident about the matter.

"Because," explained Bobby, "ma says that it ain't safe to trust me where there's fire."—New York Sun.

Giving the Gods a Sample of It.

In a Chinese village during a time of drought a missionary saw a row of idols put in the hottest and dustiest part of the road. He inquired the reason and the natives answered: "We prayed our gods to send us rain, and they won't, so we've put them out to see how they like the heat and dryness.—San Francisco Bulletin.

HYMEN IN IDAHO.

The Marrying Up of the Doane Family at Wagon Wheel Camp.

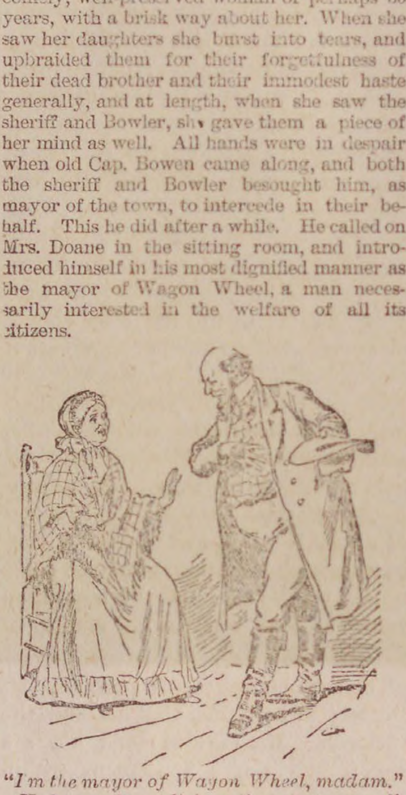
WAGON WHEEL, I. T., July 31.—A section of the recent history of this camp will give outsiders a faint idea of the demand for women which exists in parts of the west. A few weeks ago John Doane, a miner here, was taken sick, and, as he seemed likely to die, word was sent to his relatives in Missouri. In ten days his two sisters, both maiden ladies, reached Wagon Wheel, but too late to see their brother alive. He had died a few days after the telegram had been sent, and had been buried in the little cemetery under the hill, where several men had preceded him with their boots on.

The leading men of the town took the ladies in charge and saw that they were properly cared for at the hotel, where nearly everybody here called on them. One of the young women was rather tall and angular, probably 30 years of age, while the other was much younger and more prepossessing in appearance. They were well nigh exhausted after their long journey, and the mayor of the town, Cap. Bowen, and the sheriff, Sylvester Ford, insisted on their taking a good rest before attempting to transact any business or thinking of going home. Their brother had some property, and the girls decided to remain and settle up his affairs.

About a week after their arrival Sheriff Ford informed some of his friends that he was engaged to Miss Doane, the elder, and certain actions on the part of Cap. Bowen led the boys to believe that he was trying to dazzle the eyes of the younger lady. That set the town in an uproar, and from that time on for several days until the matter was settled no young woman in America was so industriously wooed as was Miss Fanny Doane. The mayor had a good start of the other boys, but he needed it, and more, too. He had been very kind to the young women, however, and it took some finesse to cut him out, but Henry Bowler, a strapping young fellow of 30, had the requisite amount.

In the course of a few days it was arranged that the weddings should take place here, and that the ladies' mother should be sent for that the thing might go off in good style.

Mrs. Doane arrived here last Monday evening on the warpath, determined that the marriages should not take place. She was a comely, well-preserved woman of perhaps 50 years, with a brisk way about her. When she saw her daughters she burst into tears, and upbraided them for their forgetfulness of their dead brother and their immodest haste generally, and at length, when she saw the sheriff and Bowler, she gave them a piece of her mind as well. All hands were in despair when old Cap. Bowen came along, and both the sheriff and Bowler besought him, as mayor of the town, to intercede in their behalf. This he did after a while. He called on Mrs. Doane in the sitting room, and introduced himself in his most dignified manner as the mayor of Wagon Wheel, a man necessarily interested in the welfare of all its citizens.



"I'm the mayor of Wagon Wheel, madam."

He began in a diplomatic way to compliment the Misses Doane. Lovelier girls he never saw. He could sympathize with the sheriff and Bowler, because his own heart had been touched.

"Now," said Bowen, "if your husband was here, madam, I could talk to him more freely, but ——"

"I have no husband," said Mrs. Doane with a sigh. "I am a widow."

"A-a-a widow? No husband?" gasped the old Cap., the idea dawning on him slowly. "Yes, yes, very sad. I see. Yes, I see. I'm sorry—that is, I'm glad that you are here. So the consent depends entirely upon you? Of course it does. Yes, it does. Suppose you think this matter over a few minutes, and I will call here again in half an hour. I must see a man on important business and then I will come back. Please do not talk with anybody else until you see me."

Then he slid out, went home, put on his boiled shirt, a stand up collar and a white necktie, and a long frock coat that he always wears on state occasions, and with a gold-headed cane in his hand he presented himself at the hotel sitting room before the half hour had expired. Mrs. Doane was sitting in the same chair and almost in the same attitude, and as the mayor entered she looked up smilingly and complimented him on his punctuality. After making a few inquiries as to the sheriff and Bowler, Mrs. Doane announced that she had about concluded to make the best of what she was afraid would be a bad job. "But," she said, "it will necessitate my moving here. I never could leave those girls out here alone—never in the world."

The old captain pulled down his vest, and, after passing his cane from one hand to the other a few times, said: "That is what I was about to say, Mrs. Doane. You see, we need the fair sex in this town. Your daughters, lovely girls, will make six, and if you should stay that will be—that will be seven; yes, seven. Now, I was about to say that, since the young folks are to settle down here so comfortably, what is to prevent you, being a widow, as you observed some time ago, from settling here also? Ahem!"

Mrs. Doane fanned herself vigorously, looked out of the window, and said: "That is what I said, sir."

The mayor mopped his bald head, and with an expression signifying that he was about to try it again, he began:

"Yes, I know, and, as I was saying, since the young folks are to have a wedding, why shouldn't you and I, neither of us yet very old, also figure in one? I offer myself to you humbly. I am the mayor of the town, and I own $7,000 worth of property hereabouts. I will help you look after the dear creatures."

Mrs. Doane understood him now, and rising from her chair swept out of the room with a remark to the effect that she must have time to think. If he would call the next day she would give him an answer. That evening the widow and her daughters talked the matter over long and earnestly, and the old captain, who was a little anxious, stood in front of the hotel and notified all callers that the ladies were indisposed and could not be seen. To the sheriff he confided his secret, with the remark that until this thing was settled the common herd "had got to stand back." The next day the mayor received a favorable answer, and last evening the three couples were married by the minister, Mr. Norris, the whole town being present.

Although the sheriff and Bowler are happy men, they do not show it as much as the captain does. He will wear his long black coat every day hereafter.—New York Sun.

GENERAL NOTES.

We hope that the report is not true that that good looking and good man, Major George S. Merril of Lawrence, is a candidate for congress. If there is any thing which grieves a true journalist it is to hear that another shining light in that profession has wandered into the devious paths of politics.

There is honor enough in getting up a paper for one man, and a good editor can afford to leave office seeking to the other fellows. That is the reason why we dislike to see our esteemed agricultural friend, Colonel Marden of Lowell, an aspirant for office. Or how could that most excellent man, Editor Horton of the Salem Gazette, benefit his fame any by securing a nomination for congress? Or what better off would Colonel Taylor of the Globe be, if he should gain the mayoralty of Boston. Did Editor Puisifer of the Herald expand his reputation any as mayor of Newton or has the tempestuos Boutelle made any more enemies as congressman than he did as editor of the Bangor Whig? Or has Hiram Atkins achieved greater fame as post office broker of Vermont than as editor of his Montpelier paper?

The fact is there never was a tolerably successful newspaper man who did not hurt himself by going into politics, from Greeley down. Having such examples before, we hope Major Merrill will continue to court fame and win her smiles as editor of the Lawrence American, rather than as candidate for congressman honors.—Boston Record.

If ever in moments when lonely,
You turn to this book with names strewn
Twill call up in memory I fancy,
The smile and the glance that has shone
On the face of friends that you cherish,
As they cherish thoughts of your own
Till lost in the gay throng ideal,
You find you are no more alone.

Why should we count our life by years,
Since years are short and pass away!
Or why by fortune's smiles or tears
Since tears are vain and smiles decay;
Oh! count by virtues—these shall last,
When life's lame-footed race is o'er,
And these when earthly joys are past
May cheer us on a brighter shore.

When the name that I write here is dim on the page,
And the leaves of your album are yellow
with age,
Still think of me kindly and do not forget.
That wherever I am I remember you yet.

Ayer,s Ague Cure is strictly a vegetable preparation, harmless, and warranted to cure all malarial disorders.

That every kindly wish and thought,
By friends expressed within these pages
Be yours, and trials common to us all,
May cross your path by easy stages

Some will write verses,
And in fine rhyme,
But I'll write my name
For you —— this time.

Fulfill God's will give up your own
Leave others and their faults alone
Forget there is a letter I
You'll happy live and peaceful die.

Angels attend thee! May their Wings
Fan every shadow from thy brow,
For only good and lovely things
Should wait on one so good as thou.

Look before you ere you leap
For as you sow you're like to reap.

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

Unknown to Others

Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared with the greatest skill and care, by pharmacists of education and long experience. Hence it is a medicine worthy of entire confidence. If you suffer from scrofula, salt rheum, or any disease of the blood, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, or kidney and liver complaints, catarrh or rheumatism, do not fail to try

It is conceded that the difficulty between the manufacturers and the workmen is not a question of wages, or of hours of labor. The men in many shops have no grievance; the employers say they were in most cases satisfied with the men. It is, then, a direct conflict between the two organizations, the Manufacturers Association and the Knights of Labor.

We understand that the manufacturers have said, in effect, recently, that their object was not to break up the organization of the men—that they were willing the workmen should be members of the Knights of Labor. They have said, too, that the circular was not intended to have the obnoxious meaning put upon it by the Knights. Disinterested people, outside of the trouble, understand it as the latter do. The Knights cannot agree to it without violating their obligations to the organization. It means, then, to them, the breaking of faith with the order, or withdrawing from fellowship with it. If, then, there is such a difference of opinion regarding this circular, if it admits of more than one meaning, why cannot the manufacturers withdraw it, and allow the men to return to work on the old basis? We think they would find the men ready to accept these terms.

We think the Knights of Labor, as a whole, do not approve of the splitters' price list presented to the manufacturers. We think they are willing to admit that many of the acts of the Executive Board of District 77 have been unwise. We judge this, because the latter board has been re-organized and more conservative men put in their place. Further than this, the splitters, who requested the Executive Board to make the demand, have already yielded, for themselves, and some of them returned to work. The fifty-nine hours request is of small moment either to the men or employers. In some of the shops it is already the regular time; we don't believe either side would quibble five minutes over this provision.

As we have said, previously, the manufacturers should not insist upon the men leaving their organization, or violating their honor. They may induce some to do this; they may starve others into it. The organization may be weakened thereby. But it should be remembered that the tanners and curriers out of employment are not the entire body of Knights of Labor in this town. The morocco manufacturers have no trouble with their men; and most of them are Knights. The firm of Webster & Co., one of the largest manufacturers of leather here, is not included in the association, and their men, most of them Knights, are at work. Thomas E. Proctor, we learn, did not post up the circular, and, although he has discharged some of the men, the latter are ready to work at any time. They have no grievance. So that if the men are compelled to renounce their organization, by those firms who insist upon the terms of the circular, they will do it under protest. Charles Sumner once said: "Nothing is ever settled that is not settled right."

Once more, it was truly said by the Boston Journal, yesterday, that the leather dealers of this town, with only five exceptions, mostly finish their stock for Boston parties. They own but a small part of it. They have to pay rent, furnish the labor, and are not entirely independent of Boston capitalists. These manufacturers cannot afford to close their shops any more than the men can afford to be idle. If they are not allowed to resume business until the difficulty is settled with the others, who can probably afford to close up their shops for a year, they must go the wall. The larger manufacturers will monopolize the entire business. The smaller ones must either have a settlement or be forced to suffer great loss, if not ruin.

Upon the manufacturers' committee, then, who have, like the Executive Board of the Knights, control of the method of settlement, rests a greater responsibility than we think they realize—a responsibility to the body politic, of which they are a part—to the manufacturers themselves, and the town or city in which they do business. They cannot say that they prefer foreign labor to that of the men who have for years been in their employ, and who know their work, and the way in which it should be done. Both sides wish it were settled. The people of this town and Salem would rejoice at a settlement. There need be no coercion on either side. There may be an honorable settlement. "Nothing can be settled that is not settled right."

We gladly give place, in another column, to a communication from a respected citizen criticising our position of last week respecting the Sunday mass meeting. Our columns are always open to such criticism. Both the gentleman himself and his opinion are entitled to respect and consideration, even though we do not agree with him.

The remarks of the writer require from us a word in explanation of our position which is evidently not clear in the mind of our correspondent. He says: "the Press is not the paper in which I should have looked for such sentiment." Why not? We have been a defender of the Law and Order League from the time of its organization. Our position is the same to-day. But, as we have said once or twice before, because of that, we do not feel obliged to agree with them in EVERY THING they do. As our correspondent says, "we are all liable to mistakes;" and we think this was one of the mistakes into which the Law and Order League was led. This was our judgment when we heard the notice read in church. We have seen no reason since, and see none now, for changing our opinion.
